Glory to God in the highest. Luke.

2. The felicity of heaven prepared for those that please God.

Thou shalt guide me with thy counsel, and afterwards receive me to thy glory. Psalms.

Then enter into glory, and resume
His seat at God's right hand, exalted high

3. Honour; praise; fame; renown; celebrity.

I think it no glory to swell in tyranny. Sidney.

Glory is like a circle in the water,
Which never ceaseth to enlarge itself,
'Till by broad spreading it disperse to nought. Shak.

And with that word and warning soon was dight,
Each soldier longing for near coming glory. Fairfax.

Can we imagine that either the ambition of princes, or interest, or gain in private persons, or curiosity and the desire of knowledge, or the glory of discoveries, could ever move them in that endless time to try their fortunes upon the sea. Burnet.

4. Splendour; magnificence.

Solomon, in all his glory, was not arrayed like one of these. Matthew.

Treated so ill, chas'd from your throne,
Returning, you adorn the town;
And with a brave revenge do show
Their glory went and came with you. Waller.

Aristotle says, that should a man under ground converse with works of art, and be afterwards brought up into the open day, and see the several glories of the heaven and earth, he would pronounce them the works of God. Addison.

5. Lustre; brightness.

Now sleeping flocks on their soft fleeces lie:
The moon, serene in glory, mounts the sky. Pope.

From op'ning skies may streaming glories shine,
And saints embrace thee with a love like mine. Pope.

6. A circle of rays which surrounds the heads of saints in picture.

It is not a converting but a crowning grace; such an one as irradiates, and puts a circle of glory about the head of him upon whom it descends. South.

A smile plays with a surprising agreeableness in the eye, breaks out with the brightest distinction, and sits like a glory upon the countenance. Collier.

7 Pride; boastfulness; arrogance.

By the vain glory of men they entered into the world, and therefore shall they come shortly to an end. Wisdom.

8. Generous pride.

The success of those wars was too notable to be unknown to your ears, to which all worthy fame hath glory to come unto. Sidney.

To GLORY. v. n. [glorior, Lat.] To boast in; to be proud of.

With like judgment glorying when he had happened to do a thing well, as when he had performed some notable mischief. Sidney.

They were wont, in the pride of their own proceedings, to glory, that whereas Luther did but blow away the roof, and Zuinglius batter but the walls of popish superstition, the last and hardest work of all remained, which was to raze up the very ground and foundation of popery. Hooker.

Let them look they glory not in mischief,
Nor build their evils on the graves of great men;
For then my guiltless blood must cry against them. Shak.

Your glorying is not good. 1 Cor.

Thou hast seen mount Atlas,
While storms and tempests thunder on its brow,
And oceans break their billows at its feet,
It stands unmov'd, and glories in its height. Addison.

This title is what I most glory in, and what most effectually calls to my mind the happiness of that government under which I live. Addison.

If others may glory in their birth, why may not we, whose parents were called by God to attend on him at his altar? Att.

No one is out of the reach of misfortune; no one therefore should glory in his prosperity. Clarissa.

To GLOSE. v. a. To flatter; to collogue. Hanmer. See To GLOZE.

GLOSS. n. s. [γλῶσσα; glose, French.]

1. A scholium; a comment.

They never hear sentence, which mentioneth the word of scripture, but forthwith their glosses upon it are the more preached, the scripture explained, or delivered unto us in sermons. Hooker.

If then all souls, both good and bad, do teach,
With gen'ral voice, that souls can never die;
'Tis not man's flatt'ring gloss, but nature's speech,
Which, like God's oracles, can never lie. Davies.

Some mutter at certain passages therein, by putting glosses upon the text, and taking with the left hand what they give with the right. Hooker.

All this, without a gloss or comment,
He could unriddle in a moment. Hudibras.

In many places he has perverted my meaning by his glosses, and interpreted my words into blasphemy and dawning, of which they were not guilty. Dryden.

They give the scandal, and the wise discern;
Their glosses teach an age too apt to learn. Dryd.

Explaining the text in short glosses, was Accursius's method. Baker's Reflections on Learning.

Indentures, cov'nants, articles they draw,
Large as the fields themselves, and larger far
Than civil codes with all their glosses are. Pope.

2. An interpretation artfully specious; a specious representation.

Poor painters oft with silly poets join,
To fill the world with strange but vain conceit;
One brings the stuff, the other stamps the coin,
Which breeds nought else but glosses of deceit. Sidney.

It is no part of my secret meaning to draw you headlong into hatred, or to set upon the face of this cause any fairer gloss than the naked truth doth afford. Hooker.

He seems with forged quaint conceit
To set a gloss upon his bad intent. Shakspeare.

The common gloss
Of theologians. Milton.

3. Superficial lustre.

His iron coat, all over grown with rust,
Was underneath enveloped with gold,
Whose glistering gloss dark'ned with filthy dust. Spenser.

You are a sectary,
That's the plain truth: your painted gloss discovers,
To men that understand you, words and weakness. Shak.

Golden opinions from all sorts of people,
Which would be worn now in their newest gloss. Shak.

The doubt will be whether it will polish so well; for steel glosses are more resplendent than the like plates of brass, and so is the glittering of a blade. Bacon.

Weeds that the wind did toss
The virgins wore: the youths, woven coats, that cast a faint dim gloss,
Like that of oil. Chapman.

It was the colour of devotion, giving a lustre to reverence, and a gloss to humility. South.

Groves, fields, and meadows, are at any season pleasant to look upon; but never so much as in the opening of the spring, when they are all new and fresh, with their first gloss upon them. Addison's Spectator.

To GLOSS. v n. [gloser, Fr. from the noun.]

1. To explain by comment.

No woman shall succeed in Salique land;
Which Salique land the French unjustly gloss
To be the realm of France. Shakspeare.

In parchment then, large as the fields, he draws
Assurances, big as gloss'd civil laws. Donne.

2. To palliate by specious exposition or representation.

Is this the paradise, in description whereof so much glossing and deceiving eloquence hath been spent? Hooker.

Do I not reason wholly on your conduct?
You have the art to gloss the foulest cause. Philips.

3. To embellish with superficial lustre.

But thou, who lately of the common strain
Wert one of us, if still thou do'st retain
The same ill habits, the same follies too,
Gloss'd over only with a saint-like show,
Then I resume the freedom which I gave,
Still thou art bound to vice, and still a slave. Dryden.

GLO'SSARY. n. s. [glossarium, Latin; glossaire, French.] A dictionary of obscure or antiquated words.

According to Varro, the most learned of the Romans, when delubrum was applied to a place, it signified such a one, in quo Dei simulachrum dedicatum est; and also in the old glossaries. Stillingfleet.

I could

I could add another word to the glossary. Baker.

GLOSSA'TOR. n. f. [glossateur, French, from gloss.] A writer of glosses; a commentator.

The reason why the assertion of a single judge does not prove the existence of judicial acts, is because his office is to pronounce judgment, and not to become an evidence: but why may not the same be said of two judges? Therefore, in this respect, the glossator's opinion must be false. Ayliffe.

GLO'SSER. n. f. [glossarius, Latin.]

1. A scholiast; a commentator.
2. A polisher.

GLO'SSINESS. n. f. [from glossy.] Smooth polish; superficial lustre.

The rest entire
Shone with a glossy scurf. Milton.

His surcoat was a bearskin on his back;
His hair hung long behind, and glossy raven black. Dryden.

Myself will search our planted grounds at home,
For downy peaches and the glossy plum. Dryden.

GLOVE. n. f. [gloꝛe, Saxon, from klaffue, Danish, to divide.] Cover of the hands.

Like an uproar in a town,
Before them every thing went down;
They flew about like chaff i' th' wind;
For haste some left their masks behind,
Some could not stay their gloves to find. Drayton.

White gloves were on his hands, and on his head
A wreath of laurel. Dryden.

To GLOVE. v. a. [from the noun.] To cover as with a glove.

My limbs,
Weaken'd with grief, being now enrag'd with grief,
Are thrice themselves: hence therefore, thou nice crutch;
A scaly gauntlet now, with joints of steel,
Must glove this hand. Shakespeare.

The next he preys on is her palm,
That alm'ner of transpiring balm;
So soft, 'tis air but once remov'd;
Tender as 'twere a jelly glov'd. Cleaveland.

GLO'VER. n. f. [from glove.] One whose trade is to make or sell gloves.

Does he not wear a great round beard like a glover's paring knife! Shakespeare.

To GLOUT. v. n. [A low word of which I find no etymology.] To pout; to look sullen. It is still used in Scotland.

She lurks in midst of all her den, and streaks
From out a ghastly whirlpool all her necks,
Where, glowting round her rock, to fish she falls. Chapman.

Glouting with sullen spight, the fury shook
Her clotted locks, and blasted with each look. Garth.

To GLOW. v. n. [gloꝛan, Saxon; gloeyen, Dutch.]

1. To be heated so as to shine without flame.

But sithence silence lesseneth not my fire,
But told it flames, and hidden it does glow,
I will reveal what ye so much desire. Spenser.

His goodly eyes,
That o'er the files and musters of the war
Have glow'd like plated Mars, now bend, now turn
Their office upon a tawny front. Shakespeare.

Kunigund, wife to the emperor Henry II. to show her innocency, did take seven glowing irons, one after another, in her bare hands, and had thereby no harm. Hakewill.

Not all parts like, but all alike inform'd
With radiant light, as glowing iron with fire. Milton.

2. To burn with vehement heat.

Nor would you find it easy to compose
The mettled steeds, when from their nostrils flows
The scorching fire that in their entrails glows. Addison.

How op'ning heav'ns their happy regions show,
And yawning gulphs with flaming vengeance glow. Smith.

Fires that glow,

For others good, or melt at others woe. Pope.

To praise is always hard,
When real virtue fires the glowing bard. Lewis.

6. To rage or burn as a passion.

A fire which every windy passion blows;
With pride it mounts, and with revenge it glows. Dryden.

When crept into aged veins,
Love slowly burns, and long remains;
It glows, and with a sullen heat,
Like fire in logs, it warms us long. Shadwell.

To GLOW. v. a. To make hot so as to shine. Not in use.

On each side her
Stood pretty dimpled boys, like smiling Cupids,
With divers colour'd fans, whose wind did seem,
To glow the delicate cheeks which they did cool. Shak.

GLOW. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Shining heat.
2. Vehemence of passion.
3. Brightness or vividness of colour.

And light them at the fiery glowworm's eyes. Shakespeare.

The glowworm shews the matin to be near,
And 'gins to pale his uneffectual fire. Shakespeare.

A great light drowneth a smaller that it cannot be seen; as the sun that of a glowworm. Bacon.

The man, who first upon the ground
A glowworm spy'd, supposing he had found
A moving diamond, a breathing stone;
For life it had, and like those jewels shone:
He held it dear, 'till by the springing day
Inform'd, he threw the worthless worm away. Waller.

To GLOZE. v. n. [gloꝛan, Saxon.]

1. To flatter; to wheedle; to insinuate; to fawn.

Most dangerous
Is that temptation, that doth goad us on
To sin in loving virtue. Shakesp. Measure for Measure.

Goaded with most sharp occasions,
Which lay nice manners by, I put you to
The use of your own virtues. Shakespeare.

Of all that breathes the various progeny,
Stung with delight, is goaded on by thee. Dryden.

Goal. n. s. [gaule, French, a long pole set up to mark the bounds of the race.]

1. The landmark set up to bound a race; the point marked out to which racers run.

As at the Olympian games, or Pythian fields,
Part curb their fiery steeds, or shun the goal
With rapid wheels. Milton's Paradise Lost.

And the slope sun his upward beam
Shoots against the dusky pole,
Pacing toward the other goal. Milton.

2. The starting post.

Hast thou beheld, when from the goal they start,
The youthful charioteers with heaving heart
Rush to the race. Dryden's Virg. Georg.

3. The final purpose; the end to which a design tends.

Our poet has always the goal in his eye, which directs him in his race: some beautiful design, which he first establishes, and then contrives the means, which will naturally conduct him to his end. Dryden's Ovid, Preface.

Each individual seeks a sev'ral goal;
But heav'n's great view is one, and that the whole. Pope.

So man, who here seems principal alone,
Perhaps acts second to some sphere unknown:
Touches some wheel, or verges to some goal;
'Tis but a part we see, and not a whole.
Pope's Essay on Man.

4. It is sometimes improperly writren for gaol, or jail.

GOLD. n. ſ. [ɣolꝺ, Saxon; gelud, riches, Welſh. It is called gold in our Engliſh tongue either of geel, as Scaliger ſays, which is in Dutch to ſhine; or of another Dutch word, which is gelten, and ſignifies in Latin valere, in Engliſh to be of price or value: hence cometh their ordinary word gelt, for money. Peacham on Drawing.]

1. Gold is the heavieſt, the moſt denſe, the moſt ſimple, the moſt ductile, and moſt fixed of all bodies; not to be injured either by air or fire, and ſeeming incorruptible. It is ſoluble by means of ſea-ſalt; but is injured by no other ſalt, and is moſt eaſily of all metals amalgamated with ſilver. Gold is frequently found native, and very rarely in a ſtate of ore. It never conſtitutes a peculiar ore, but is found moſt frequently among ore of ſilver. Native gold is ſeldom found pure, but has almoſt conſtantly ſilver with it, and very frequently copper. Gold duſt, or native gold, in ſmall maſſes, is mixed among the ſand of rivers in many parts of the world. It is found, in the greateſt abundance, bedded in maſſes of hard ſtone, often at the depth of a hundred and fifty fathoms in the mines of Peru. Pure gold is ſo fixed, that Boerhaave informs us of an ounce of it ſet in the eye of a glaſs furnace for two months, without loſing a ſingle grain. Hill.

Gold hath theſe natures: greatneſs of weight, cloſeneſs of parts, fixation, pliantneſs or ſoftneſs, immunity from ruſt, and the colour or tincture of yellow. Bacon.

Ah! Buckingham, now do I ply the touch,
To try if thou be current gold indeed. Shakeſp.

We commonly take ſhape and colour for ſo preſumptive ideas of ſeveral ſpecies, that, in a good picture, we readily ſay this is gold, and that a ſilver goblet, only by the different figures and colours repreſented to the eye by the pencil. Locke.

The gold fraught veſſel, which mad tempeſts beat,
He ſees now vainly make to his retreat. Dryden.

GRANGE. n. ſ. [grange, French.] A farm: generally a farm with a houſe at a diſtance from neighbours.

One, when he had got the inheritance of an unlucky old grange, would needs ſell it; and, to draw buyers, proclaimed the virtues of it: nothing ever thrived on it, ſaith he; the trees were all blaſted, the ſwine died of the meaſles, the cattle of the murrain, and the ſheep of the rot; nothing was ever reared there, not a duckling or a gooſe. Ben. Johnſon.

At the moated grange reſides this dejected Mariana. Shakeſp.

The looſe unletter'd hinds,
When for their teeming flocks and granges full
In wanton dance they praiſe the bounteous Pan. Milton.

If the church was of their own foundation, they might chuſe, the incumbent being once dead, whether they would put any other therein, unleſs, perhaps, the ſaid church had people belonging to it; for then they muſt ſtill maintain a curate: and of this ſort were their granges and priories. Ayliffe.

GRA'NITE. n. ſ. [granit, Fr. from granum, Lat. becauſe conſiſting as it were of grains, or ſmall diſtinct particles.] A ſtone compoſed of ſeparate and very large concretions, rudely compacted together; of great hardneſs, giving fire with ſteel; not fermenting with acids, and imperfectly calcinable in a great fire. The hard white granite with black ſpots, commonly called moor-ſtone, forms a very firm, and though rude, yet beautifully variegated maſs. It is found in immenſe ſtrata in Ireland, but not uſed there. In Cornwal and the adjacent counties it is found on the ſurface of the earth in prodigious maſſes, and brought in great quantities to London, where it is uſed for the ſteps of publick buildings. Hard red granite, variegated with black and white, now called oriental granite, is valuable for its extreme hardneſs and beauty, and capable of a moſt elegant poliſh. It is common in Egypt and Arabia, and and is alſo found in the Weſt of England little inferior. The vulgar opinion of their being caſt out of various fragments of marble, becauſe they appear compoſed of particles or granules of different colours, is eaſily confuted by an accurate inſpection of the ſtructure and formation of thoſe granules, the leaſt and meaneſt of which no human art could ever compoſe, nor fire leave in the ſtate in which we ſee them. A third ſort of granite has a beautiful variegation of colours, red, white, black and yellow, and capable of an elegant poliſh: it is little inferior in beauty to the oriental granite, and there are immenſe ſtrata of it in Minorca. Detached nodules of it, two or three foot in circumference, are alſo frequent on the ſhores of Guernſey, from whence it is brought as ballaſt, and uſed in paving our ſtreets. Hill.

Alabaſter, marble of divers colours, both ſimple and mixed, the opulites, porphyry, and the granite. Woodward.

There are ſtill great pillars of granite, and other fragments of this antient temple. Addiſon.

GRANI'VOROUS. adj. [granum and voro, Lat.] Eating grain; living upon grain.

Granivorous birds, as a crane, upon the firſt peck of their bills, can diſtinguiſh the qualities of hard bodies, which the ſenſe of men diſcerns not without maſtication. Brown.

Panick affords a ſoft demulcent nouriſhment, both for granivorous birds and mankind. Arbuthnot.

GRA'NNAM. n. ſ. [for grandam.] Grandmother. Only uſed in burleſque works.

Oft my kind grannam told me, Tim, take warning. Gay.

GRIST. n. s. [gnipt, Saxon.]

1. Corn to be ground.
Get grist to the mill to have plenty in store,
Lest miller lack water. Tusser.
A mighty trade this lusty miller drove;
Much grist from Cambridge to his lot did fall,
And all the corn they us'd at Scholars-hall. Miller of Tromp.
2. Supply; provision.
Matter, as wise logicians say,
Cannot without a form subsist;
And form, say I, as well as they,
Must fail, if matter brings no grist. Swift.
3. GRIST to Mill, is profit; gain.
The computation of degrees, in all matrimonial causes, is wont to be made according to the rules of that law, because it brings grist to the mill. Ayliffe.

GRI'STLE. n. s. [gnipcle, Saxon.] A cartilage; a part of the body next in hardness to a bone.
No living creatures, that have shells very hard, as oysters, crabs, lobsters, and especially the tortoise, have any bones within them, but only little gristles. Bacon.
Lest the asperity or hardness of these cartilages should hurt the œsophagus or gullet, which is tender and of a skinny substance, or hinder the swallowing of our meat, therefore these annulary gristles are not made round, or intire circles; but where the gullet touches the windpipe, there, to fill up the circle, is only a soft membrane, which may easily give way to the dilatation of the gullet. Ray.

GRI'STLY. adj. [from gristle.] Cartilaginous; made of gristle.
At last they spit out pieces of their lungs; it may be small gristly bits, that are eaten off from the lung-pipes. Harvey.
She has made the back-bone of several vertebræ, as being more fit to bend, more tough, and less in danger of breaking, than if they were all one intire bone without these gristly junctures. More.
Fins are made of gristly spokes, or rays connected by membranes; so that they may be contracted or extended like womens fans. Ray.
They have a louder and stronger note than other birds of the same bigness, which have only a gristly windpipe. Grew.

To cherish life aerial pasture brings. Blackmore.

GRIT. n. s. [gnyzza, gneoz, Saxon.]

1. The coarse part of meal.
2. Oats husked, or coarsely ground.
3. Sand; rough hard particles.
Silesian bole, crackling a little betwixt the teeth, yet without the least particle of grit, feels as smooth as Castile soap. Grew's Musæum.
The sturdy pear-tree here
Will rise luxuriant, and with toughest root
Pierce the obstructing grit and restive marle. Philips.
4. Grits are fossils found in minute masses, forming together a kind of powder; the several particles of which are of no determinate shape, but seem the rudely broken fragments of larger masses; not to be dissolved or disunited by water, but retaining their figure, and not cohering into a mass. They are opake, and in many species fermenting with acids, and often fouled with heterogene matters. One sort is a fine, dull looking, grey grit, which, if wetted with salt-water into mortar or paste, dries almost immediately, and coalesces into a hard stony mass, such as is not easily afterwards disunited by water. This is the pulvis puteolanus of the ancients, mixed among their cements used in buildings sunk into the sea; and in France and Italy an ingredient in their harder plaisters, under the name of pozzolane. It is common on the sides of hills in Italy. Another species, which is a coarse, beautifully green, dull grit, is the chrysocolla of the ancients, which they used in soldering gold, long supposed a lost fossil. It serves the purpose of soldering metals better than borax, and may be had for carriage from the shores of New England. The ferruginous black glittering grit, is the black shining sand employed to throw over writing, found on the shores of Italy. What is commonly used in London is from Genoa. The coarse, glittering, brownish black is nearly of the same nature, but inferior, in all respects. Hill.

GRI'TTINESS. n. s. [from gritty.] Sandiness; the quality of abounding in grit.
In fullers-earth he could find no sand by the microscope, nor any grittiness. Mortimer.

GRI'TTY. adj. [from grit.] Full of hard particles; consisting of grit.
I could not discern the unevenness of the surface of the powder, nor the little shadows let fall from the gritty particles thereof. Newton.

GRI'ZELIN. adj. [More properly gridelin. See GRIDELIN.]
The Burgundy, which is a grizelin or pale red, of all others, is surest to ripen in our climate. Temple.

GRI'ZZLE. n. s. [from gris, gray; grisaille, French.] A mixture of white and black; gray.
O thou dissembling cub! what wilt thou be,
When time hath sow'd a grizzle on thy face? Shakespeare.

GRI'ZZLED. adj. [from grizzle.] Interspersed with gray.
To the boy Cæsar, send this grizzled head. Shakesp.
His beard was grizzled, no.
—It was as I have seen it in his life. Shakespeare.
His hair just grizzled,
As in a green old age. Dryden and Lee.
Those grizzled locks, which nature did provide
In plenteous growth, their asses ears to hide. Dryden.

GRI'ZZLY. adj. [from gris, gray, French.] Somewhat gray.
Living creatures generally do change their hair with age, turning to be gray and white; as is seen in men, though some earlier, some later; in horses that are dappled, and turn white; and in old squirrels, that turn grizzly. Bacon.

To GROAN. v. n. [gnanan, Saxon; gronen, Dutch.] To breathe with a hoarse noise, as in pain or agony.
Many an heir
Of these fair edifices, for my wars,
Have I heard groan and drop. Shakespeare.
Men groan from out of the city, and the soul of the wounded crieth out. Job.
Repenting and groaning for anguish of spirit. Wisdom.
So shall the world go on,
To good malignant, to bad men benign,
Under her own weight groaning. Milton.
Nothing can so peculiarly gratify the noble dispositions of humanity, as for one man to see another so much himself as to sigh his griefs and groan his pains. South.
On the blazing pile his parent lay,
Or a lov'd brother groan'd his life away. Pope.

GROAN. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Breath expired with noise and difficulty.
Alas poor country,
Where sighs and groans, and shrieks that rend the air,
Are made, not mark'd! Shakespeare.
I led to slaughter, and to slaughter leave;
And ev'n from hence their dying groans receive. Dryden.
2. Any hoarse dead sound.
Such sheets of fire, such bursts of horrid thunder,
Such groans of roaring wind and rain, I never Remember to have heard. Shakespeare.

GRO'ANFUL. adj. [groan and full.] Sad; agonizing.

So far hath the natural underſtanding, even of ſundry whole nations, been darkened, that they have not diſcerned, no, not groſs iniquity to be ſin. Hooker.

3. Intellectually coarſe; palpable; impure; unrefined.

To all ſenſe 'tis groſs
You love my ſon: invention is aſham'd,
Againſt the proclamation of thy paſſion,
To ſay thou do'ſt not. Shakeſpeare.

Examples groſs as earth exhort me. Shakeſpeare.

Like groſs terms,
The prince will in the perfectneſs of time
Caſt off his followers. Shakeſpeare.

Belial came laſt, than whom a ſpirit more lewd
Fell not from heaven, or more groſs to love
Vice for itſelf. Milton.

Is not religion ſo perfectly good in itſelf, above all, in its author, that, without the groſſeſt ſenſuality, we cannot but admire it. Spratt.

It is a groſs miſtake of ſome men, to think that our wants only and imperfections do naturally induce us to be beneficent. Smalridge.

4. Inelegant; diſproportionate in bulk.

The ſun's oppreſſive ray the roſeat bloom
Of beauty blaſting, gives the gloomy hue,
And feature groſs. Thomſon.

5. Thick; not refined; not pure.

It is manifeſt, that when the eye ſtandeth in the finer medium, and the object is in the groſſer, things ſhew greater; but contrariwiſe, when the eye is placed in the groſſer medium, and the object in the finer. Bacon.

Of elements,
The groſſer feeds the purer; earth the ſea,
Earth and the ſea feed air. Milton.

Light fumes are merry, groſſer fumes are ſad;
Both are the reaſonable ſoul run mad. Dryden.

Or ſuck the miſts in groſſer air below,
Or dip their pinions in the painted bow. Pope.

6. Stupid; dull.

If ſhe doth then the ſubtile ſenſe excel,
How groſs are they that drown her in the blood? Davies.

And in clear dream and ſolemn viſion,
Tell her of things that no groſs ear can hear. Milton.

Some men give more light and knowledge by the bare ſtating of the queſtion with perſpicuity and juſtneſs, than others by talking of it in groſs confuſion for whole hours together. Watts.

7. Coarſe; rough; oppoſite to delicate.

Fine and delicate ſculptures are helped with nearneſs, and groſs with diſtance. Wotton.

8. Thick; fat; bulky.

GROSS. n. ſ. [from the adjective.]

1. The main body; the main force.

The Belgians hop'd, that with diſorder'd haſte
The deep-cut keels upon the ſands might run;
Or, if with caution leiſurely were paſt,
Their numerous groſs might charge us one by one. Dryden.

Several caſuiſts are of opinion, that, in a battle, you ſhould diſcharge upon the groſs of the enemy, without levelling your piece at any particular perſon. Addiſon.

The groſs of the people can have no other proſpect in changes and revolutions than of publick bleſſings. Addiſon.

2. The bulk; the whole not divided into its ſeveral parts.

Certain general inducements are uſed to make ſaleable your cauſe in groſs. Hooker.

There was an opinion in groſs, that the ſoul was immortal. Abbot.

The articulate sounds are more confused, though the gross of the sound be greater. Bacon.

5. The number of twelve dozen. [Grosse, French.]

It is made up only of that simple idea of an unit repeated; and repetitions of this kind, joined together, make those distinct simple modes of a dozen, a gross, and a million. Locke.

GRO'SSLY. adv. [from gross.]

1. Bulkily; in bulky parts; coarsely: as, this matter is grossly pulverized.

2. Without subtilty; without art; without delicacy; without refinement; coarsely; palpably.

Such kind of ceremonies as have been so grossly and shamefully abused in the church of Rome, where they remain, are scandalous. Hooker.

Treason and murder ever kept together,
As two yoke devils sworn to others purpose;
Working so grossly in a natural cause,
That admiration did not whoop at them. Shakesp.

And thine eyes
See it so grossly shown in thy behaviour,
That in their kind they speak it. Shakespeare.

What! are we cuckolds ere we have deserv'd it?
—Speak not so grossly. Shakespeare.

What I have said has been forced from me, by seeing a noble sort of poetry so happily restored by one man, and so grossly copied by almost all the rest. Dryden.

If at any time I speak of light and rays as coloured, or endued with colours, I would be understood to speak not philosophically and properly, but grossly, and according to such conceptions as vulgar people, in seeing all these experiments, would be apt to frame. Newton.

While it is so difficult to learn the springs and motives of some facts, it is no wonder they should be so grossly misrepresented to the publick by curious inquisitive heads. Swift.

GRO'SSNESS. n. s. [from gross.]

1. Coarseness; not subtilty; thickness; greatness of parts.

The purpose is perspicuous even as substance,
Whose grossness little characters sum up. Shakespeare.

And I will purge that mortal grossness so,
That thou shalt like an airy spirit go. Shakespeare.

The cause of the epilepsy from the stomach is the grossness of the vapours which rise and enter into the cells of the brain. Bacon's Natural History.

Then all this earthy grossness quit;
Attir'd with stars we shall for ever sit,
Triumphing over death. Milton.

So this being the first colour which vapours begin to reflect, it ought to be the colour of the finest and most transparent skies, in which vapours are not arrived to that grossness requisite to reflect other colours. Newton.

For envy'd wit, like Sol eclips'd, was known
Th' opposing body's grossness, not its own. Pope.

2. Inelegant fatness; unwieldy corpulence.

Wise men, that be over-fat and fleshy, go to sojourn abroad at the temperate diet of some sober man; and so, by little and little, eat away the grossness that is in them. Ascham.

3. Want of refinement; want of delicacy; intellectual coarseness.

I was three or four times in the thought they were not fairies; and yet the guiltiness of my mind drove the grossness of the foppery into a received belief that they were fairies. Shak.

Whatever beauties it may want, 'tis free at least from the grossness of those faults I mentioned. Dryden.

What a grossness is there in the mind of that man, who thinks to reach a lady's heart by wounding her ears! Clarissa.

GROT. n. s. [grotte, French; grotta, Italian.] A cave; a cavern for coolness and pleasure.

GROTE'SQUE. adj. [grotesque, French; grotteſco, Italian.] Distorted of figure; unnatural; wildly formed.

The champaign head
Of a steep wilderness, whose hairy sides
With thicket overgrown, grotesque and wild,
Access deny'd. Milton.

There is yet a lower sort of poetry and painting, which is out of nature; for a farce is that in poetry which grotesque is in a picture: the persons and actions of a farce are all unnatural, and the manners false, that is, inconsisting with the characters of mankind: grotesque painting is the just resemblance of this. Dryden.

An hideous figure of their foes they drew,
Nor lines, nor looks, nor shades, nor colours true,
And this grotesque design expos'd to publick view. Dryden.

Palladian walls, Venetian doors,
Grotesco roofs, and stucco floors. Pope.

GRO'TTO. n. s. [grotte, French; grotta, Italian.] A cavern or cave made for coolness. It is not used properly of a dark horrid cavern.

The bow'rs of kings, to shade them from the sun. Dryden.

This was found at the entry of the grotto in the Peak. Woodward on Fossils.

GROVE. n. s. [from grave.] A walk covered by trees meeting above.

I look'd toward Birnam, and anon methought
The wood began to move:
Within this three mile may you see it coming;
I say, a moving grove. Shakespeare.

Fortunate fields, and groves, and flow'ry vales;
Thrice happy isles! Milton.

Banish'd from courts and love,
Abandon'd truth seeks shelter in the grove. Granville.

Can fierce passions vex his breast,
While every gale is peace, and every grove
Is melody? Thomson.

To GRO'VEL. v. n. [grufde, Islandick, flat on the face. It may perhaps come by gradual corruption from ground feel.]

1. To lie prone; to creep low on the ground.

The steel-head passage wrought,
And through his shoulder pierc'd; wherewith to ground
He groveling fell, all gored in his gushing wound. Spenser.

What see'st thou there? king Henry's diadem,
Inchas'd with all the honours of the world!
If so, gaze on, and grovel on thy face,
Until thy head be circled with the same. Shakespeare.

Now they lie
Groveling and prostrate on yon lake of fire. Milton.

Upon thy belly groveling thou shalt go. Milton.

Let us then conclude that all painters ought to acquire this part of excellence: not to do it, is to want courage, and not dare to shew themselves: 'tis to creep and grovel on the ground. Dryden.

2. To be mean; to be without dignity or elevation.

I must disclaim whate'er he can express;
His groveling sense will show my passion less. Dryden.

Several thoughts may be natural which are low and groveling. Addison.

GROUND. n. s. [grunb, Saxon; grondt, Danish.]

1. The earth, considered as solid, or as low.

8. The first stratum of paint upon which the figures are afterwards painted.

We see the limner to begin with a rude draught, and the painter to lay his grounds with shadows and darksome colours. Hakewill on Providence.

When solid bodies, sensible to the feeling and dark, are placed on light and transparent grounds, as, for example, the heavens, the clouds and waters, and every other thing which is in motion, and void of different objects; they ought to be more rough, and more distinguishable, than that with which they are encompassed. Dryden.

9. The fundamental substance; that by which the additional or accidental parts are supported.

Indeed

Indeed it was but juſt that the fineſt lines in nature ſhould be drawn upon the moſt durable ground. Pope.

10. The plain ſong; the tune on which deſcants are raiſed.

Get a prayer-book in your hand,
And ſtand between two churchmen, good my lord;
For on that groun'd I'll build a holy deſcant. Shakeſpeare.

11. Firſt hint; firſt traces of an invention; that which gives occaſion to the reſt.

Though jealouſy of ſtate th' invention found,
Yet love refin'd upon the former ground;
That way the tyrant had reſerv'd to fly,
Purſuing hate, now ſerv'd to bring two lovers nigh. Dryden.

12. The firſt principles of knowledge.

The concords will eaſily be known, if the fore grounds be thoroughly beaten in. Preface to Accidence.

While our's with eaſy victory were crown'd. Dryden.

He has loſt ground at the latter end of the day, by purſuing his point too far, like the prince of Conde at the battle of Senepa. Dryden.

16. The intervening ſpace between the flyer and purſuer.

Ev'ning miſt,
Ris'n from a river, o'er the mariſh glides,
And gathers ground faſt at the labourer's heels,
Homeward returning. Milton.

Superiors think it a detraction from their merit to ſee another get ground upon them, and overtake them in the purſuits of glory. Addiſon.

Even whilſt we ſpeak our conqueror comes on,
And gathers ground upon us every moment. Addiſon.

17. The ſtate in which one is with reſpect to opponents or competitors.

Had'ſt thou ſway'd as kings ſhould do,
Giving no ground unto the houſe of York,
They never then had ſprung. Shakeſpeare.

If they got ground and 'vantage of the king,
Then join you with them like a rib of ſteel,
To make them ſtronger. Shakeſpeare.

He will ſtand his ground againſt all the attacks that can be made upon his probity. Atterbury.

Whatever ground we may have gotten upon our enemies, we have gotten none upon our vices, the worſt enemies of the two; but are even ſubdued and led captive by the one, while we triumph ſo glorioufly over the others. Atterbury.

18. State of progreſs or receſſion.

I have known ſo many great examples of this cure, and heard of its being ſo familiar in Auſtria, that I wonder it has gained no more ground in other places. Temple.

The ſquirrel is perpetually turning the wheel in her cage: ſhe runs apace, and wearies herſelf with the continual motion, and gets no ground. Dryden.

19. The foil to ſet a thing off.

Like bright metal on a ſullen ground,
My reformation glittering o'er my fault,
Shall ſhew more goodly, and attract more eyes,
Than that which hath no foil to ſet it off. Shakeſpeare.

A lance of tough groundaſh the Trojan threw,
Rough in the rind, and knotted as it grew. Dryden.

Some cut the young aſhes off about an inch above the ground, which cauſes them to make very large ſtraight ſhoots, which they call groundaſh. Mortimer.

GRO'UND-BAIT. n. ſ. [from ground and bait.] A bait made of barley or malt boiled; which, being thrown into the place where you deſign to angle, ſinks to the bottom, and draws the fiſh to it.

Take the depth of the place where you mean after to caſt your groundbait, and to fiſh. Walton.

GRO'UND-FLOOR. n. ſ. [ground and floor.] The lower ſtory of a houſe.

GRO'UND-IVY. n. ſ. [hedera terreſtris, Latin.] Alehoof, or tunhoof.

The ſhoots trail upon the ground, and emit roots from almoſt every joint, which faſten themſelves into the earth: the leaves are roundiſh, thick, rough, and crenated on the edges: the helmet of the flower is roundiſh, bifid, and reflexed: the beard or lower lip is trifid, or cut into three ſegments; the middle ſegment is broad and bifid, and the flowers are produced at the joints of the ſhoots. The ſpecies are, firſt, common groundivy, or gill-go-by-ground; and ſecond, leſſer groundivy. Miller.

Alehoof or groundivy is, in my opinion, of the moſt excellent uſe and virtue of any plants among us. Temple.

GRO'UND-OAK. n. ſ. [ground and oak.]

If the planting of oaks were more in uſe for underwoods, it would ſpoil the coopers trade for the making of hoops, either of haſel or aſh; becauſe one hoop made of the young ſhoots of a groundoak, would outlaſt ſix of the beſt aſh. Mort.

GRO'UND-PINE. n. ſ. [chamæpitys, Latin.]

The leaves are narrow and trifid; the flower labiated: the place of the creſt of the flower is ſupplied with little teeth: the lower lip is divided into three parts, the middle ſegment being ſplit again into two parts. The flowers rarely grow in whorles, but one or two are produced at the wings of the leaves. Miller.

The whole plant has a very ſingular ſmell, reſembling that of reſin; whence its name groundpine. It grows on dry and barren hills, and in ſome places on the ditch-banks by road-ſides. It is highly extolled, by the generality of medical writers, as an aperient, cephalick, and nervous medicine; but it is however little uſed at preſent. Hill.

GRO'UND-PLATE. n. ſ. [In architecture.] The outermoſt pieces of timber lying on or near the ground, and framed into one another with mortiſes and tennons. In theſe alſo are mortiſes made to receive the tennons of the joiſts, the ſummer, and girders; and ſometimes the trimmers for the ſtair-caſe and chimney way, and the binding joiſt. Harris.

In the orthographical ſchemes there ſhould be a true delineation, if it be a timber-building, of the ſeveral ſizes of the groundplates, breaſt-ſummers, and beams. Mortimer.

GUARDIAN of the ſpiritualties. He to whom the ſpiritual juriſdiction of any dioceſe is committed, during the vacancy of the ſee. He may be either guardian in law, or jure magiſtratus, as the archbiſhop is of any dioceſe within his province, or guardian by delegation, as he whom the archbiſhop or vicar-general doth for the time depute. Cowel.

GUA'RDIAN. adj. Performing the office of a kind protector or ſuperintendant.

My charming patroneſs protects me unſeen, like my guardian angel; and ſhuns my gratitude like a fairy, who is bountiful by ſtealth, and conceals the giver, when ſhe beſtows the gift. Dryden.
Thus ſhall mankind his guardian care engage,
The promis'd father of the future age. Pope.
Mean while Minerva, in her guardian care,
Shoots from the ſtarry vaults through fields of air. Pope.

GUA'RDIANSHIP. n. ſ. [from guardian.] The office of a guardian.

The curate ſtretched his patent for the cure of ſouls to a kind of tutelary guardianſhip over goods and chattels. L'Eſtr.
Theſeus is the firſt who eſtabliſhed the popular ſtate in Athens, aſſigning to himſelf the guardianſhip of the laws, and chief commands in war. Swift.

GUA'RDLESS. adj. [from guard.] Without defence.

So on the guardleſs herd, their keeper ſlain,
Ruſhes a tyger in the Lybian plain. Waller.
A rich land, guardleſs and undefended, muſt needs have been a double incitement. South.

GUA'RDSHIP. n. ſ. [from guard.]

1. Care; protection.

How bleſs'd am I, by ſuch a man led!
Under whoſe wiſe and careful guardſhip
I now deſpiſe fatigue and hardſhip. Swift.

2. [Guard and ſhip.] A king's ſhip to guard the coaſt.

GUA'IAVA. } n. ſ.
GUA'VA. }

The flowers conſiſt of five leaves, produced in a circular order, having many ſtamina or threads ſurrounding the ovary: the ovary is of a long tubulous figure, which becomes a bilocular fruit, crowned on the top, and containing many ſmall hard ſeeds. The fruit, ſays Sir Hans Sloane, is extremely delicious and wholſome. They have only this inconvenience, that, being very aſtringent, they ſtop up the belly, if taken in great quantities. Miller.

GUBERNA'TION. n. ſ. [gubernatio, Lat.] Government; ſuperintendency; ſuperior direction.

Perhaps there is little or nothing in the government of the kingdoms of nature and grace, but what is tranſacted by the man Jeſus, inhabited by the divine power and wiſdom, and employed as a medium or conſcious inſtrument of this extenſive gubernation. Watts.

GU'DGEON. n. ſ. [goujon, French.]

1. A ſmall fiſh found in brooks and rivers, eaſily caught, and therefore made a proverbial name for a man eaſily cheated.

'Tis true, no turbets dignify my boards;
But gudgeons, flounders, what my Thames affords. Pope.
This he did to draw you in, like ſo many gudgeons, to ſwallow his falſe arguments. Swift.

2. Something to be caught to a man's own diſadvantage; a bait; an allurement: gudgeons being commonly uſed as baits for pike.

But fiſh not with this melancholy bait,
For this fool's gudgeon, this opinion. Shakeſpeare.

GUE'RDON. n. ſ. [guerdon, gardon, French.] A reward; a recompence. A word now no longer in uſe.

He hearken'd, and did ſtay from further harms,
To gain ſo goodly guerdon as ſhe ſpake. Fairy Queen, b. i.
But to the virgin comes, who all this while
Amazed ſtands herſelf ſo mock'd to ſee,
By him who is the guerdon of his guile,
For ſo miſſeigning her true knight to be. Spenſer.
He ſhall, by the revenging hand, at once receive the juſt Knolles.
guerdon of all his former villanies.
Fame is the ſpur that the clear ſpirit doth raiſe
To ſcorn delights, and live laborious days;
But the fair guerdon when we hope to find,
And think to burſt out into ſudden blaze,
Comes the blind fury with th' abhorred ſheers, Milton.
And ſlits the thin-ſpun life.

To GUESS. v. a. [ghiſſen, Dutch.]

1. To conjecture; to judge without any certain principles of judgment.

Incapable and ſhallow innocents! Shakeſp.
You cannot gueſs who caus'd your father's death.
Let not your ears deſpiſe my tongue for ever,
Which ſhall poſſeſs them with the heavieſt ſound Thar.

That ever yet they heard.
—Hum! I gueſs at it. Shakeſpeare.

He that, by reaſon of his ſwift motions, can inform himſelf of all places and preparations, ſhould he not very often gueſs rightly of things to come, where God pleaſeth not to give impediment? Raleigh.

There iſſue ſwarming bands
Of ambuſh'd men, whom, by their arms and dreſs,
To be Lycaonian enemies I gueſs. Dryden.

The ſame author ventures to gueſs at the particular fate which would attend the Roman government. Swift.

Nor can imagination gueſs,
How that ungrateful charming maid
My pureſt paſſion has betray'd. Swift.

2. To conjecture rightly.

One may gueſs by Plato's writings, that his meaning, as to the inferior deities, was, that they who would have them might, and they who would not, might let them alone; but that himſelf had a right opinion concerning the true God. Stillingfleet's Defence of Diſc. on Rom. Idol.

To GUESS. v. a. To hit upon by accident; to determine rightly of any thing without certain direction of the judgment.

If Xerxes was able to call every common ſoldier by his name in his army, it may be gueſſed he got not this wonderful ability by learning his leſſons by heart. Locke.

GUESS. n. ſ. [from the verb.] Conjecture; judgment without any poſitive or certain grounds.

The enemy's in view; draw up your powers:
Hard is the gueſs of their true ſtrength and forces. Shakeſp.

A poet muſt confeſs
His art's like phyſick, but a happy gueſs. Dryden.

It is a wrong way of proceeding to venture a greater good for a leſs, upon uncertain gueſſes, before a due examination. Locke.

We may make ſome gueſs at the diſtinction of things, into thoſe that are according to, above, and contrary to reaſon. Locke.

This problem yet, this offspring of a gueſs,
Let us for once a child of truth confeſs. Prior.

GUE'SSER. n. ſ. [from gueſs.] Conjecturer; one who judges without certain knowledge.

It is the opinion of divers good gueſſers, that the laſt fit will not be more violent than advantageous. Pope.

If fortune ſhould pleaſe but to take ſuch a crochet,
To thee I apply, great Smedley's ſucceſſor,
To give thee lawn-ſleeves, a mitre and rochet,
Whom would'ſt thou reſemble? I leave thee a gueſſer. Swift.

GUE'SSINGLY. adv. [from gueſſing.] Conjecturally; uncertainly.

What confed'racy have you with the traytors
Late footed in the kingdom?
——I have a letter gueſſingly ſet down,
Which came from one that's of a neutral heart,
And not from one oppos'd. Shakeſpeare.

GUEST. n. ſ. [ȝeſt, ȝyſt, Saxon; gweſt, Welſh.]

1. One entertained in the houſe of another.

They all murmured, ſaying, that he was gone to be gueſt with a man that is a ſinner. Luke.

Methinks a father
Is, at the nuptial of his ſon, a gueſt
That beſt becomes the table. Shakeſpeare.

Tell my royal gueſt
I add to his commands my own requeſt. Dryden.

2. A ſtranger; one who comes newly to reſide.

O deſarts, deſarts! how fit a gueſt am I for you, ſince my heart can people you with wild ravenous beaſts, which in you are wanting. Sidney.

Thoſe happieſt ſmiles
That play'd on her ripe lip, ſeem'd not to know
What gueſts were in her eyes; which parted thence
As pearls from diamonds dropt. Shakeſpeare.

GUE'STCHAMBER. n. ſ. [gueſt and chamber.] Chamber of entertainment.

Where is the gueſtchamber, where I ſhall eat the paſſover with my diſciples? Mark xiv. 14.

To GU'GGLE. v. n. [gorgoliare, Italian.] To ſound as water running without intermiſſions out of a narrow mouthed veſſel.

GUI'DAGE. n. ſ. [from guide.] The reward given to a guide. Ainſworth.

GUI'DANCE. n. ſ. [from guide.] Direction; government.

As to thoſe who lived under the guidance of reaſon alone, without the aſſiſtance of ſupernatural light, it is highly probable that miracles, or a meſſage from the dead, would perſuade them. Atterbury.

Particular application muſt be left to Chriſtian prudence, under the guidance of God's holy ſpirit, who knows our neceſſity before we aſk, and our ignorance in aſking. Rogers.

A prince ought not to be under the guidance or influence of either faction, becauſe he declines from his office of preſiding over the whole to be the head of a party. Swift.

To GUIDE. v. a. [guider, French.]

1. To direct in a way.

When the Spirit of truth is come, he will guide you into all truth. John xvi. 13.

The new light ſerved to guide them to their neighbours coffers. Decay of Piety.

Whoſoever has a faithful friend to guide him in the dark paſſages of life, may carry his eyes in another man's head, and yet ſee never the worſe. South.

2. To govern by counſel; to inſtruct.

For thy name's ſake lead me and guide me. Pſalms.

3. To regulate; to ſuperintend.

Women neglect that which St. Paul aſſigns them as their proper buſineſs, the guiding of the houſe. Decay of Piety.

GUIDE. n. ſ. [guide, French; from the verb.]

1. One who directs another in his way.

Judas was guide to them that took Jeſus. Acts.

Thou gaveſt them a burning pillar of fire, to be a guide of the unknown journey. Wiſdom.

Can knowledge have no bound, but muſt advance
So far to make us wiſh for ignorance?
And rather in the dark to grope our way,
Than led by a falſe guide to err by day? Denham.

2. One who directs another in his conduct.

While yet but young his father dy'd,

3. Director; regulator.

Who the guide of nature, but only the God of nature? In him we live, move and are. Thoſe things which nature is ſaid to do, are by divine art performed, uſing nature as an inſtrument: nor is there any ſuch art or knowledge divine in nature herſelf working, but in the guide of nature's work. Hooker, b. i. ſ. 3.

Some truths are not by reaſon to be tried,
But we have ſure experience for our guide. Dryden.

GUI'DELESS. adj. [from guide.] Without a guide; without a governour or ſuperintendant.

Th' ambitious Swede, like reſtleſs billows toſt,
Though in his life he blood and ruin breath'd,
To his now guideleſs kingdom peace bequeath'd. Dryden.

There fierce winds o'er duſky valleys blow,
Whoſe every puff bears empty ſhades away,
Which guideleſs in thoſe dark dominions ſtray. Dryden.

GUI'DER. n. ſ. [from guide.] Director; regulator; guide.

Our guider come! to the Roman camp conduct us. Shak.

That perſon, that being provoked by exceſſive pain, thruſt his dagger into his body, and thereby, inſtead of reaching his vitals, opened an impoſthume, the unknown cauſe of all his pain, and ſo ſtabbed himſelf into perfect health and eaſe, ſurely had great reaſon to acknowledge chance for his chirurgeon, and providence for the guider of his hand. South.

GUI'DON. n. ſ. [French.] A ſtandardbearer; a ſtandard. Obſolete.

GUILD. n. ſ. [ȝılꝺꝛcıp, Saxon, a fellowſhip, a corporation.] A ſociety; a corporation; a fraternity or company, combined together by orders and laws made among themſelves by their prince's licence. Hence the common word gild or guildhall proceeds, being a fraternity or commonalty of men gathered into one combination, ſupporting their common charge by mutual contribution. Cowel.

Towards three or four o'clock
Look for the news that the guild hall affords. Shakeſpeare.

In woollen cloth it appears, by thoſe ancient guilds that were ſettled in England for this manufacture, that this kingdom greatly flouriſhed in that art. Hale.

As when the long-ear'd milky mothers wait
At ſome ſick miſer's triple-bolted gate,
For their defrauded abſent foals they make
A moan ſo loud, that all the guild awake. Pope.

GUILE. n. ſ. [guille, gille, old French; the ſame with wile.] Deceitful cunning; inſidious artifice; miſchievous ſubtilty.

With fawning words he courted her awhile,
And looking lovely, and oft ſighing ſore,
Her conſtant heart did court with divers guile;
But words and looks, and ſighs ſhe did abhor. Spenſer.

When I have moſt need to employ a friend,
Deep, hollow, treacherous, and full of guile,
Be he to me! This do I beg of heav'n,
When I am cold in zeal to you or yours. Shakeſpeare.

We may, with more ſucceſsful hope, reſolve
To wage by force or guile eternal war. Milton.

Nor thou his malice and falſe guile contemn:
Subtile he needs muſt be who could ſeduce
Angels. Milton.

GUI'LEFUL. adj. [guile and full.]

1. Wily; inſidious; miſchievouſly artful.

The way not to be inveigled by them that are ſo guileful through ſkill, is thoroughly to be inſtructed in that which maketh ſkilful againſt guile. Hooker.

Without experience at all,
By guileful fair words, peace may be obtain'd. Shakeſpeare.

He saw his guileful act
By Eve, though all unweeting, seconded
Upon her husband. Milton.
The guileful phantom now forsook the shrowd,
And flew sublime, and vanish'd in a cloud. Dryden.

2. Treacherous; secretly mischievous.
I train'd thy brethren to that guileful hole,
Where the dead corps of Bassianus lay. Shakespeare.

GUI'LEFULLY. adv. [from guileful.] Insidiously; treacherously.
To whom the tempter guilefully reply'd. Milton.

GUI'LEFULNESS. n. s. [from guileful.] Secret treachery; tricking cunning.

GUI'LELESS. adj. [from guile.] Without deceit; without insidiousness; simply honest.

GUI'LER. n. s. [from guile. See BEGUILE.] One that betrays into danger by insidious practices.
But he was wary wise in all his way,
And well perceived his deceitful sleight;
Ne suffered lust his safety to betray;
So goodly did beguile the guiler of the prey. Spenser.

GUILT. n. s. [gylt, Saxon, originally signified the fine or mulct paid for an offence, and afterward the offence itself.]

1. The state of a man justly charged with a crime; the contrary to innocence.
It was neither guilt of crime, nor reason of state, that could quench the envy that was upon the king for this execution. Bacon.
When these two are taken away, the possibility of guilt, and the possibility of innocence, what restraint can the belief of the creed lay upon any man? Hammond.

2. A crime; an offence.
Close pent up guilts
Rive your concealing continents, and ask
These dreadful summoners grace. Shakespeare.

GUI'LTILY. adv. [from guilty.] Without innocence; without clearness of conscience.
Bloody and guilty, guiltily awake,
And in a bloody battle end thy days:
Think on lord Hastings, and despair and die. Shakespeare.

GUI'LTINESS. n. s. [from guilty.] The state of being guilty; wickedness; consciousness of crime.
He thought his flight rather to proceed of a fearful guiltiness than of an humble faithfulness. Sidney.
The last was I that felt thy tyranny:
O, in the battle think on Buckingham,
And die in terrour of thy guiltiness. Shakespeare.
I should be guiltier than my guiltiness. Shakespeare.

GUI'LTLESS. adj. [from guilt.] Innocent; free from crime.
I am in this commanded to deliver
The noble duke of Clarence to your hands:
I will not reason what is meant hereby,
Because I will be guiltless of the meaning. Shakespeare.
Many worthy and chaste dames thus,
All guiltless, meet reproach. Shakespeare.
Then shall the man be guiltless from iniquity, and this woman shall bear her iniquity. Numbers.
Thou, who do'st all thou wisheſt at thy will,
And never willest aught but what is right,
Preserve this guiltless blood they seek to spill;
Thine be my kingdom. Fairfax.
Guiltless of greatness, thus he always pray'd,
Nor knew nor wish'd he, that those vows he made
On his own head should be at last repaid. Dryden.
Thou know'st how guiltless first I met thy flame,
When love approach'd me under friendship's name. Pope.

GUI'LTLESSLY. adv. [from guiltless.] Without guilt; innocently.

GUI'LTLESSNESS. n. s. [from guiltless.] Innocence; freedom from crime.
A good number, trusting to their number more than to their value, and valuing money higher than equity, felt that guiltlessness is not always with ease oppressed. Sidney.
I would not have had any hand in his death, of whose guiltlessness I was better assured than any man living could be. King Charles.

GUI'LTY. adj. [gylteg, Saxon, one condemned to pay a fine for an offence.]

1. Justly chargeable with a crime; not innocent.
Is there not a ballad of the king and the beggar?
—The world was guilty of such a ballad some three ages since. Shakespeare.
Mark'd you not
How that the guilty kindred of the queen
Look'd pale, when they did hear of Clarence' death? Shak.
We are verily guilty concerning our brother, in that we saw the anguish of his soul when he besought us, and we would not hear. Genesis.
With mortal hatred I pursu'd his life,
Nor he, nor you, were guilty of the strife;
Nor I, but as I lov'd; yet all combin'd,
Your beauty and my impotence of mind. Dryden.

Farewel the stones
And threshold, guilty of my midnight moans. Dryden.
There is no man, that is knowingly wicked, but is guilty to himself; and there is no man, that carries guilt about him, but he receives a sting into his soul. Tillotson.

2. Wicked; corrupt.
All the tumult of a guilty world,
Tost by ungenerous passions, sinks away. Thomson.

GUI'NEA. n. s. [from Guinea, a country in Africa abounding with gold.] A gold coin valued at one and twenty shillings.
By the word gold I must be understood to design a particular piece of matter; that is, the last guinea that was coined. Locke.

GUINE'ADROPPER. n. s. [guinea and drop.] One who cheats by dropping guineas.
Who now the guineadropper's bait regards,
Trick'd by the sharper's dice, or juggler's cards. Gay.

GUI'NEAHEN. n. s. A small Indian hen.

GUINE'APEPPER. n. s. [capsicum, Latin.]
The characters are: the flowers consist of one leaf, and are expanded like those of nightshade: the fruit is soft, fleshy, and membraneous, divided into two or more cells, in which are contained many flat kidney-shaped seeds. Miller.

GUI'NEAPIG. n. s. A small animal with a pig's snout.

GUISE. n. s. [The same with wise; guise, French; ƿira, Saxon, the p or w being changed as is common into g.]

1. Manner; mien; habit; cast of behaviour.
His own fire, and master of his guise,
Did often tremble at his horrid view. Spenser.
Thus women know, and thus they use the guise,
T' enchant the valiant and beguile the wise. Fairfax.
Lo you! here she comes: this is her very guise; and, upon my life, fast asleep: observe her, stand close. Shakespeare.
They stand a horrid front
Of dreadful length, and dazzling arms, in guise
Of warriors old, with order'd spear and shield,
Awaiting what command their mighty chief
Had to impose. Milton.
By their guise
Just men they seem, and all their study bent
To worship God a-right. Milton.
Back, shepherds, back;
Here be without duck or nod,
Other trippings to be trod,
Of lighter toes and such court guise,
As Mercury did first devise. Milton.
Their external shapes are notoriously accommodated to that law or guise of life that nature has designed them. More.

GU'LCHIN. } Skinner.

GULES. adj. [perhaps from geule, the throat.] Red: a barbarous term of heraldry.
Follow thy drum;
With man's blood paint the ground: gules, gules;
Religious canons, civil laws are cruel;
Then what should war be? Shakespeare.
He whose sable arms,
Black as his purpose, did the knight resemble,
When he laid couched in the ominous horse,
Hath now his dread and black complexion smear'd
With heraldry more dismal; head to foot,
Now he is total gules. Shakespeare.

GULF. n. s. [golfo, Italian.]

1. A bay; an opening into land.
Pisaurius, the Venetian admiral, knowing himself unable to encounter with the Turks great fleet at sea, withdrew himself farther off from the island Corfu, into the gulf of the Adriatick. Knolles.

2. An abyss; an unmeasurable depth.
Thence turning back, in silence soft they stole,
And brought the heavy corse with easy pace
To yawning gulf of deep Avernus' hole;
By that same hole, an entrance dark and base,
With smoak and sulphur hiding all the place,
Descends to hell. Spenser.

I know thou'd'ſt rather
Follow thine enemy in a fiery guiſ,
Than flatter him in a bower. Shakeſpeare.

This is the guiſ through which Virgil's Alecto ſhoots herſelf into hell: the fall of waters, the woods that encompaſs it, are all in the deſcription. Addiſon.

The ſea could not be much narrower than it is, without a great loſs to the world; and muſt we now have an ocean of mere flats and ſhallows, to the utter ruin of navigation, for fear our heads ſhould turn giddy at the imagination of gaping abyſſes and unfathomable gulfs? Bentley.

3. A whirlpool; a ſucking eddy.

England his approaches makes as fierce
As waters to the ſucking of a gulf. Shakeſpeare.

4. Any thing inſatiable.

All who the war of ten long years ſurviv'd,
And 'ſcap'd the perils of the gulfy main. Pope.

High o'er a gulfy ſea the Pharian iſle
Fronts the deep roar of diſemboguing Nile. Pope.

To GULL. v. a. [guiller, to cheat, old French.] To trick; to cheat; to defraud; to deceive.

If I do not gull him into a nay word, and make him a common recreation, do not think I have wit enough to lie ſtraight in my bed. Shakeſpeare.

Yet love theſe ſorc'ries did remove, and move
Thee to gull thine own mother for my love. Donne.

He would have gull'd him with a trick,
But Mart was too too politick. Hudibras.

They are not to be gulled twice with the ſame trick. L'Eſtr.

The Roman people were groſly gulled twice or thrice over, and as often enſlaved in one century, and under the ſame pretence of reformation. Dryden.

By their deſigning leaders taught,
The vulgar, gull'd into rebellion, arm'd. Dryden.

For this advantage age from youth has won,
As not to be out-ridden, though out-run;
By fortune he was now to Venus trin'd,
And with ſtern Mars in Capricorn was join'd:
Of him diſpoſing in his own abode,
He ſooth'd the goddeſs, while he gull'd the god. Dryden.

GULL n. ſ. [from the verb.]

1. A ſea-bird.

2. A cheat; a fraud; a trick.

I ſhould think this a gull, but that the white-bearded fellow ſpeaks it. Shakeſpeare.

H.

HIs in Engliſh, as in other languages, a note of aſpiration, ſounded only by a ſtrong omiſſion of the breath, without any conformation of the organs of ſpeech, and is therefore by many grammarians accounted no letter. The h in Engliſh is ſcarcely ever mute at the beginning of a word, or where it immediately precedes a vowel; as houſe, behaviour: where it is followed by a conſonant it has no ſound, according to the preſent pronunciation: but anciently, as now in Scotland, it made the ſyllable guttural; as right, bought.

HA. interject. [ha, Latin.]

1. An expreſſion of wonder, ſurpriſe, ſudden queſtion, or ſudden exertion.

You ſhall look fairer ere I give or hazard:
What ſays the golden cheſt? ha! let me ſee. Shakeſpeare.
Ha! what art thou! thou horrid headleſs trunk!
It is my Haſtings! Rowe.

2. An expreſſion of laughter.

He ſaith among the trumpets ha, ha, and he ſmelleth the battle afar off. Job xxxix. 25.

Ha, ha, 'tis what ſo long I wiſh'd and vow'd;
Our plots and deluſions
Have wrought ſuch confuſions,
That the monarch's a ſlave to the crowd. Dryden.

HAAK. n. ſ. A fiſh. Ainſworth.

HABEAS CORPUS. [Latin.] A writ, the which a man indicted of ſome treſpaſs, being laid in priſon for the ſame, may have out of the King's Bench, thereby to remove himſelf thither at his own coſts, and to anſwer the cauſe there. Cowel.

HABERDA'SHER. n. ſ. [This word is ingeniouſly deduced by Minſhew from habt ihr daſs, German, have you this, the expreſſion of a ſhopkeeper offering his wares to ſale.] One who ſells ſmall wares; a pedlar.

Becauſe theſe cunning men are like haberdaſhers of ſmall wares, it is not amiſs to ſet forth their ſhop. Bacon.

A haberdaſher, who was the oracle of the coffeehouſe, declared his opinion. Addiſon.

4. Cuſtom; inveterate uſe.

This is the laſt fatal ſtep but one, which is, by frequent repetition of the ſinful act, to continue and perſiſt in it, 'till at length it ſettles into a fixed confirmed habit of ſin; which being properly that which the apoſtle calls the finiſhing of ſin, ends certainly in death; death not only as to merit, but alſo as to actual infliction. South.

No civil broils have ſince his death aroſe,
But faction now by habit does obey;
And wars have that reſpect for his repoſe,
As winds for halcyons when they breed at ſea. Dryden.

The force of education is ſo great, that we may mould the minds and manners of the young into what ſhape we pleaſe, and give the impreſſions of ſuch habits as ſhall ever afterwards remain. Atterbury.

To HA'BIT. v. a. [from the noun.] To dreſs; to accoutre; to array.

Preſent yourſelf and your fair princeſs
Before Leontes:
She ſhall be habited as it becomes
The partner of your bed. Shakeſpeare.

Having called to his memory Sir George Villiers, and the cloaths he uſed to wear, in which at that time he ſeemed to be habited, he thought him to be that perſon. Clarendon.

To HARP. v. n. [harper, French; from the noun.]

1. To play on the harp.

I heard the voice of harpers harping with their harps. Rev.

Things without life giving ſound, whether pipe or harp, except they give a diſtinction in the ſounds, how ſhall it be known what is piped or harped. 1 Corinthians.

The helmed cherubim,
And ſworded ſeraphim,
Are ſeen in glitt'ring ranks with wings diſplay'd,
Harping in loud and ſolemn quire,
With unexpreſſive notes to heav'n's new-born heir. Milton.

I conceive you harp a little too much upon one ſtring. Collier on Pride.

2. To touch any paſſion, as the harper touches a ſtring; to dwell on a ſubject.

Gracious duke,
Harp not on that, nor do not baniſh reaſon

For inequality; but let your reaſon ſerve
To make the truth appear. Shakeſpeare.
Macbeth, beware Macduff!
Beware the thane of Fife: diſmiſs me: enough.
——Whate'er thou art, for thy good caution, thanks:
Thou'ſt harp'd my fear aright. Shakeſpeare.
He ſeems
Proud and diſdainful, harping on what I am,
Not what he knew I was. Shakeſpeare.

HA'RPER. n. ſ. [from harp.] A player on the harp.
Never will I truſt to ſpeeches penn'd,
Nor to the motion of a ſchoolboy's tongue;
Nor wooe in rhime, like a blind harper's ſong. Shakeſpeare.
I'm the god of the harp: ſtop, my faireſt:—in vain;
Nor the harp, nor the harper, could fetch her again. Tickell.

HA'RPING Iron. n. ſ. [from harpago, Latin.] A bearded dart with a line faſtened to the handle, with which whales are ſtruck and caught.
The boat which on the firſt aſſault did go,
Struck with a harping iron the younger foe;
Who, when he felt his ſide ſo rudely gor'd,
Loud as the ſea that nouriſh'd him he roar'd. Waller.

HARPONE'ER. n. ſ. [harponeur, French; from harpoon.] He that throws the harpoon in whaleſiſhing.

HARPO'ON. n. ſ. [harpon, French.] A harping iron.

HARRIDA'N. n. ſ. [corrupted from haridelle, a worn-out worthleſs horſe.] A decayed ſtrumpet.
She juſt endur'd the Winter ſhe began,
And in four months a batter'd harridan;
Now nothing's left, but wither'd, pale, and ſhrunk,
To bawd for others, and go ſhares with punk. Swift.

HA'RROW. n. ſ. [charroue, French; harcke, German, a rake.] A frame of timbers croſſing each other, and ſet with teeth, drawn over ſowed ground to break the clods and throw the earth over the ſeed.
The land with daily care
Is exercis'd, and with an iron war
Of rakes and harrows. Dryden.
Two ſmall harrows, that clap on each ſide of the ridge, harrow it right up and down. Mortimer.

To HA'RROW. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To break with the harrow.
Friend, harrow in time, by ſome manner of means,
Not only thy peaſon, but alſo thy beans. Tuſſer.
Can'ſt thou bind the unicorn with his band in the furrow? or will he harrow the valleys after thee? Job.
Let the Volſcians
Plow Rome, and harrow Italy, I'll never
Be ſuch a goſling to obey inſtinct. Shakeſpeare.
2. To tear up; to rip up.
I could a tale unfold, whoſe lighteſt word
Would harrow up thy ſoul, freeze thy young blood,
Make thy two eyes, like ſtars, ſtart from their ſpheres. Sh.
Imagine you behold me bound and ſcourg'd,
My aged muſcles harrow'd up with whips;
Or hear me groaning on the rending rack. Rowe.
3. To pillage; to ſtrip; to lay waſte. See HARRY, which in Scottiſh is the ſame thing.
As the king did excel in good commonwealth laws, ſo he had in ſecret a deſign to make uſe of them, as well for collecting of treaſure as for correcting of manners; and ſo meaning thereby to harrow his people, did accumulate them the rather. Bacon.
4. To invade; to haraſs with incurſions. [From Persian, Saxon.]
And he that harrow'd hell with heavy ſtowre,
The faulty ſouls from thence brought to his heavenly bowre.
Spenſer's Fairy Queen.
Moſt glorious Lord of life, that on this day
Did'ſt make thy triumph over death and ſin;
And having harrow'd hell, did'ſt bring away
Captivity thence captive, us to win. Spenſer.
5. To diſturb; to put into commotion. [This ſhould rather be written harry, harer, French.]
Moſt like; it harrows me with fear and wonder. Shakeſp.
Amaz'd I ſtood, harrow'd with grief and care. Milton.
Harrow now out and weal away, he cried;
What diſmal day hath ſent this curſed light,
To ſee my lord ſo deadly damnify'd? Spenſer.

HA'RROW. interj. An exclamation of ſudden diſtreſs. Now out of uſe.

HA'RROWER. n. ſ. [from harrow.]
1. He who harrows.
2. A kind of hawk.

To HA'RRY. v. a. [harer, French.] Ainſworth.
1. To teaze; to hare; to ruffle.
Thou muſt not take my former ſharpneſs ill.
—I repent me much
That I ſo harry'd him. Shakeſpeare.
2. In Scotland it ſignifies to rob, plunder, or oppreſs: as, one harried a neſt; that is, he took the young away: as alſo, he harried me out of houſe and home; that is, he robbed me of my goods, and turned me out of doors. See To HARROW.

HARSH. adj. [herviſche, German, Skinner.]
1. Auſtere; roughly ſour.
Our nature here is not unlike our wine;
Some ſorts, when old, continue briſk and fine:
So age's gravity may ſeem ſevere,
But nothing harſh or bitter ought t' appear. Denham.
Sweet, bitter, ſour, harſh and ſalt, are all the epithets we have to denominate that numberleſs variety of reliſhes. Locke.
The ſame defect of heat which gives a fierceneſs to our natures, may contribute to that roughneſs of our language, which bears ſome analogy to the harſh fruit of colder countries. Swift.
2. Rough to the ear.
A name unmuſical to Volſcian ears,
And harſh in ſound to thine. Shakeſpeare.
Age might, what nature never gives the young,
Have taught thee ſmoothneſs of thy native tongue;
But ſatire needs not that, and wit will ſhine
Through the harſh cadence of a rugged line. Dryden.
The unneceſſary conſonants made their ſpelling tedious, and their pronunciation harſh. Dryden.
Thy lord commands thee now
With a harſh voice, and ſupercilious brow,
To ſervile duties. Dryden.
3. Crabbed; moroſe; peeviſh.
He was a wiſe man and an eloquent; but in his nature harſh and haughty. Bacon.
Bear patiently the harſh words of thy enemies, as knowing that the anger of an enemy admoniſhes us of our duty. Taylor.
No harſh reflection let remembrance raiſe;
Forbear to mention what thou can'ſt not praiſe. Prior.
A certain quickneſs of apprehenſion inclined him to kindle into the firſt motions of anger; but, for a long time before he died, no one heard an intemperate or harſh word proceed from him. Atterbury.
4. Rugged to the touch.
Black feels as if you were feeling needles points, or ſome harſh ſand; and red feels very ſmooth. Boyle.
5. Unpleaſing; rigorous.
With eloquence innate his tongue was arm'd;
Though harſh the precept, yet the preacher charm'd. Drya.

HA'RSHLY. adj. [from harſh.]
1. Sourly; auſterely to the palate, as unripe fruit.
2. With violence; in oppoſition to gentleneſs, unleſs in the following paſſage it rather ſignifies unripely.
'Till, like ripe fruit, thou drop
Into thy mother's lap; or be with eaſe
Gather'd, not harſhly pluck'd. Milton.
4. Severely; moroſely; crabbedly.
I would rather he was a man of a rough temper, that would treat me harſhly, than of an effeminate nature. Addiſon.
4. Ruggedly to the ear.
My wife is in a wayward mood to-day:
I tell you, 'twould ſound harſhly in her ears. Shakeſpeare.
Get from him why he puts on this confuſion,
Grating ſo harſhly all his days of quiet
With turbulent and dang'rous lunacy. Shakeſpeare.
A hollow groan, a murm'ring wind aroſe;
The rings of iron that on the doors were hung,
Sent out a jarring ſound, and harſhly rung. Dryden.

HA'RSHNESS. n. ſ. [from harſh.]
1. Sourneſs; auſtere taſte.
Take an apple and roll it upon a table hard: the rolling doth ſoften and ſweeten the fruit, which is nothing but the ſmooth diſtribution of the ſpirits into the parts; for the unequal diſtribution of the ſpirits maketh the harſhneſs. Bacon.
2. Roughneſs to the ear.
Neither can the natural harſhneſs of the French, or the perpetual ill accent, be ever refined into perfect harmony like the Italian. Dryden.
Cannot I admire the height of Milton's invention, and the ſtrength of his expreſſion, without defending his antiquated words, and the perpetual harſhneſs of their ſound? Dryden.

'Tis

'Tis not enough no harſhneſs gives offence;
The ſound muſt ſeem an echo to the ſenſe. Pope.

3. Ruggedneſs to the touch.

Harſhneſs and ruggedneſs of bodies is unpleaſant to the touch. Bacon.

4. Crabbedneſs; moroſeneſs; peeviſhneſs.

No, Regan, you ſhall never have my curſe:
Thy tender-hefted nature ſhall not give
Thee o'er to harſhneſs: her eyes are fierce, but thine
Do comfort and not burn. Sh. keſpeare.

HART. n. ſ. [ꝑeopt, Saxon.] A he-deer of the large kind; the male of the roe.

That inſtant was I turn'd into a hart,
And my deſires, like fell and cruel hounds,
E'er ſince purſue me. Shakeſpeare.

The deer
And fearful harts do wander every where Amidſt the dogs. May.

HA'RTSHORN. n. ſ.

Hartſhorn is a drug that comes into uſe as many ways, and under as many forms, as any one in the whole materia medica. What is uſed here are the whole horns of the common male deer, which fall off every year. This ſpecies is the fallow deer; but ſome tell us, that the medicinal hartſhorn ſhould be that of the true hart or ſtag, called the red deer. The ſalt of hartſhorn is a great ſudorifick, and the ſpirit has all the virtues of volatile alkalies: it is uſed to bring people out of faintings by its pungency, holding it under the noſe, and pouring down ſome drops of it in water. Hill.

Ramoſe concretions of the volatile ſalts are obſervable upon the glaſs of the receiver, whilſt the ſpirits of vipers and hartſhorn are drawn. Woodward.

HA'RTSHORN. n. ſ. An herb. Ainſworth.

HA'RT-ROYAL. n. ſ. A plant. A ſpecies of buckthorn plantain.

HA'RTSTONGUE. n. ſ. [lingua cervina, Latin.] A plant.

It commonly grows out from the joints of old walls and buildings, where they are moiſt and ſhady. There are very few of them in Europe. Miller.

Hartſtongue is propagated by parting the roots, and alſo by ſeed. Mortimer.

HARTWORT. n. ſ. [tordylium, Latin.] It is an umbelliferous plant, with a roſe-ſhaped flower, conſiſting of five unequal heart-faſhioned petals, which are placed circularly and reſt on the empalement, which afterward becomes an almoſt round fruit, compoſed of two flat ſeeds, which eaſily caſt off their covering with a raiſed border, which are commonly indented. It is an annual plant, and periſhes ſoon after it has perfected its ſeed. It is found wild in ſeveral parts of England. Miller.

HA'RVEST. n. ſ. [ꝑæꝑꝛeꝛz, Saxon.]

1. The ſeaſon of reaping and gathering the corn.

As it ebbs, the ſeedſman
Upon the ſlime and ooze ſcatters his grain,
And ſhortly comes to harveſt. Shakeſpeare.
With harveſt work he is worſe than he was in the Spring. L'Eſtrange.

2. The corn ripened, gathered and inned.

From Ireland come I with my ſtrength,
And reap the harveſt which that raſcal ſow'd Shakeſp.
When the father is too fondly kind,
Such ſeed he ſows, ſuch harveſt ſhall he find. Dryden.

3. The product of labour.

Let theſe ſmall cotts and hills ſuffice:
Let us the harveſt of our labour eat;
'Tis labour makes the coarſeſt diet ſweet. Dryden.

HA'RVEST-HOME. n. ſ.

1. The ſong which the reapers ſing at the feaſt made for having inned the harveſt.

Your hay it is mow'd, and your corn is reap'd;
Your barns will be full, and your hovels heap'd;
Come, my boys, come,
Come, my boys, come,
And merrily roar out harveſt-home. Dryden.

2. The time of gathering harveſt.

At harveſt-home, and on the ſhearing-day,
When he ſhould thanks to Pan and Pales pay,
And better Ceres, trembling to approach
The little barrel. Dryden.

3. The opportunity of gathering treaſure.

His wife ſeems to be well favoured: I will uſe it as the key of the cuckoldy rogue's coffer; and there's my harveſt-home. Shakeſpeare.

HA'RVEST-LORD. n. ſ. The head reaper at the harveſt.

Grant harveſt-lord more by a peny or two,
To call on his fellows the better to do. Tuſſ.

He kindly ſpreads his ſpacious wing,
And hatches plenty for th' enſuing Spring. Denham.
The tepid caves, and fens and ſhores,
Their brood as numerous hatch from th' eggs, that ſoon
Burſting with kindly rupture, forth diſclos'd
Their callow young. Milton.
2. To quicken the egg by incubation.
Others hatch their eggs and tend the birth, 'till it is able to ſhift for itſelf. Addiſon.
3. To produce by precedent action.
4. To form by meditation; to contrive.
Which thing they very well know, and, I doubt not, will eaſily confeſs, who live to their great both toil and grief, where the blaſphemies of Arrians are renewed by them; who, to hatch their hereſy, have choſen thoſe churches as fitteſt neſts where Athanaſius's creed is not heard. Hooker.
He was a man harmleſs and faithful, and one who never hatched any hopes prejudicial to the king, but always intended his ſafety and honour. Hayward.
5. [From hacher, to cut.] To ſhade by lines in drawing or graving.
Who firſt ſhall wound, through others arms, his blood appearing freſh,
Shall win this ſword, ſilver'd and hatcht. Chapm.
Such as Agamemnon and the hand of Greece
Should hold up high in braſs; and ſuch again
As venerable Neſtor, hatch'd in ſilver,
Should with a bond of air, ſtrong as the axle-tree
On which heav'n rides, knit all the Grecian ears
To his experienc'd tongue. Shakeſpeare.
Thoſe tender hairs, and thoſe hatching ſtrokes of the pencil, which make a kind of minced meat in painting, are never able to deceive the ſight. Dryden.

To HATCH. v. n.
1. To be in the ſtate of growing quick.
He obſerved circumſtances in eggs, whilſt they were hatching, which varied. Boyle.

Sound savory, and basil hearty-hale. Spenser.

HEAT. n. s. [þeaꝛ, þæꝛ, Saxon; heete, Danish.]

1. The sensation caused by the approach or touch of fire.

Heat is a very brisk agitation of the insensible parts of the object, which produces in us that sensation from whence we denominate the object hot; so what in our sensation is heat, in the object is nothing but motion. Locke.

The word heat is used to signify the sensation we have when we are near the fire, as well as the cause of that sensation, which is in the fire itself; and thence we conclude, that there is a sort of heat in the fire resembling our own sensation: whereas in the fire there is nothing but little particles of matter, of such particular shapes as are fitted to impress such motions on our flesh as excite the sense of heat. Watts.

2. The cause of the sensation of burning.

The sword which is made fiery doth not only cut by reason of the sharpness which simply it hath, but also burn by means of that heat which it hath from fire. Hooker.

After they came down into the valley, and found the intolerable heats which are there, and knew no means of lighter apparel, they were forced to begin the custom of going naked. Bacon's New Atlantis.

3. Hot weather.

Mark well the flow'ring almonds in the wood;
The glebe will answer to the sylvan reign;
Great heats will follow, and large crops of grain. Dryden.

The pope would not comply with the proposal, as fearing the heats might advance too far before they had finished their work, and produce a pestilence among the people. Addison.

4. State of any body under the action of the fire.

The heats smiths take of their iron are a blood-red heat, a white flame heat, and a sparkling or welding heat. Moxon.

5. One violent action unintermitted.

The continual agitations of the spirits must needs be a weakening of any constitution, especially in age; and many cause are required for refreshment betwixt the heats. Dryden.

6. The state of being once hot.

I'll strike my fortune with him at a heat,
And give him not the leisure to forget. Dryden.

7. A course at a race, between each of which courses there is an intermission.

Feign'd zeal, you saw, set out the speedier pace;
But the last heat, plain dealing won the race. Dryden.

8. Pimples in the face; flush.

It has raised animosities in their hearts, and heats in their faces, and broke out in their ribbans. Addison.

9. Agitation of sudden or violent passion; vehemence of action.

They seeing what forces were in the city with them, issued against the tyrant while they were in this heat, before practices might be used to dissever them. Sidney.

The friend hath lost his friend;
And the best quarrels, in the heat, are curst
By those that feel their sharpness. Shakespeare.

It might have pleased in the heat and hurry of his rage, but must have displeased in the cool sedate reflections of his mind. South's Sermons.

We have spilt no blood but in the heat of the battle, or the chase. Atterbury.

One playing at hazard, held in many hands together, and drew a huge heap of gold; but, in the heat of play, never observed a sharper, who swept it into his hat. Swift.

10. Faction; contest; party rage.

Our state thinks not so: they are in a most warlike preparation, and hope to come upon them in the heat of their division. Shakespeare.

I was sorry to hear with what partiality and popular heat elections were carried. King Charles.

What can more gratify the Phrygian foe
Than those distemper'd heats?

11. Ardour of thought or elocution.

Plead it to her
With all the strength and heats of eloquence,
Fraternal love and friendship can inspire. Addison.

To HEAT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To make hot; to endue with the power of burning.

He commanded that they should heat the furnace one seven times more than it was wont to be heated. Daniel.

2. To cause to ferment.

Hops lying undried heats them, and changes their colour. Mortimer's Husbandry.

3. To make the constitution feverish.

Thou art going to lord Timon's feast.
—Ay, to see meat fill knaves, and wine heat fools. Shakesp.

Whatever increaseth the density of the blood, even without increasing its celerity, heats, because a denser body is hotter than a rarer. Arbuthnot.

4. To warm with vehemence of passion or desire.

A noble emulation heats your breast,
And your own fame now robs you of your rest. Dryden.

5. To agitate the blood and spirits with action.

When he was well heated, the younger champion could not stand before him; and we find the elder contended not for the gift, but for the honour. Dryden.

HE'ATER. n. s. [from heat.] An iron made hot, and put into a box-iron, to smooth and plait linen.

HEATH. n. s. [erica, Latin.]

1. A plant.

It is a shrub of low stature: the leaves are small, and abide green all the year: the flower consists of one leaf, is naked, and, for the most part, shaped like a pitcher: the ovary, which is produced in the bottom of the flower, becomes a roundish fruit, divided into four cells, in which are contained many small seeds. Miller.

In Kent they cut up the heath in May, burn it, and spread the ashes. Mortimer.

Oft with bolder wing they soaring dare
The purple heath. Thomson.

2. A place overgrown with heath.

Say, from whence
You owe this strange intelligence? or why
Upon this blasted heath you stop our way
With such prophetick greeting. Shakespeare.

3. A place covered with shrubs of whatever kind.

Some woods of oranges, and heaths of rosemary, will smell a great way into the sea. Bacon.

HEATH-COCK. n. s. [heath and cock.] A large fowl that frequents heaths.

Cornwall hath quail, rail, partridge, pheasant, heath-cock, and powte. Carew.

HEATH-POUT. n. s. [heath and pout.] A bird.

Not heath-pout, or the rarer bird
Which Phasis or Ionia yields,
More pleasing morsels would afford
Than the fat olives of my fields. Dryden.

HEATH-PEAS. n. s. A species of bitter VETCH, which see.

HEATH-ROSE. n. s. [heath and rose.] A plant. Ainsworth.

HE'ATHEN. n. s. [heyden, German.] The gentiles; the pagans; the nations unacquainted with the covenant of grace.

Deliver us from the heathen, that we may give thanks to thy holy name. 1 Chronicles.

If the opinions of others, whom we think well of, be a ground of assent, men have reason to be heathens in Japan, mahometans in Turkey, papists in Spain, and protestants in England. Locke.

In a paper of morality, I consider how I may recommend the particular virtues I treat of, by the precepts or examples of the ancient heathens. Addison.

HEATHEN. adj. Gentile; pagan.

It was impossible for a heathen author to relate these things, because, if he had believed them, he would no longer have been a heathen. Addison.

HE'ATHENISH. adj. [from heathen.]

1. Belonging to the gentiles.

When the apostles of our Lord and Saviour were ordained to alter the laws of heathenish religion, chosen they were, St. Paul excepted; the rest unschooled altogether, and unlettered men. Hooker.

2. Wild; savage; rapacious; cruel.

The Moors did tread under their heathenish feet whatever little they found yet there standing. Spenser.

That execrable Cromwel made a heathenish or rather inhuman edict against the poor episcopal clergy, that they should neither preach, pray in publick, baptize, marry, bury, nor teach school. South.

A ſtation like the herald Mercury,
New lighted on a heaven kiſſing hill. Shakeſpeare.

Thy race in time to come
Shall ſpread the conqueſts of imperial Rome;
Rome, whoſe aſcending tow'rs ſhall heav'n invade,
Involving earth and ocean in her ſhade. Dryden.

The words are taken more properly for the air and ether than for the heavens, as the beſt Hebrecians underſtand them.
Raleigh's Hiſtory of the World.

This act, with ſhouts heav'n high, the friendly band
Applaud. Dryden.

2. The habitation of God, good angels, and pure ſouls departed.

It is a knell
That ſummons thee to heaven, or to hell. Shakeſpeare.

Theſe, the late
Heav'n baniſh'd hoſt, left deſert utmoſt hell. Milton.

All yet left of that revolted rout,
Heav'n fall'n, in ſtation ſtood, or juſt array,
Sublime with expectation. Milton.

3. The ſupreme power; the ſovereign of heaven.

Now heav'n help him! Shakeſpeare.

The will
And high permiſſion of all-ruling heav'n
Left him at large. Milton.

If I am heav'n-begot, aſſert your ſon
By ſome ſure ſign. Dryden.

HEAVEN-BORN. Deſcended from the celeſtial regions; native of heaven.

If a fever fires his ſulphurous blood,
In ev'ry fit he feels the hand of God,
And heav'n-born flame. Dryden.

Oh heav'n-born ſiſters! ſource of art!
Who charm the ſenſe, or mend the heart;
Who lead fair virtue's train along,
Moral truth, and myſtick ſong! Pope.

HEAVEN-BRED. Produced or cultivated in heaven.

Much is the force of heav'n-bred poeſy. Shakeſpeare.

HEAVEN-BUILT. Built by the agency of gods.

My ſoul inſpire,
As when we wrapt Troy's heav'n-built walls in fire. Pope.

His arms had wrought the deſtin'd fall
Of ſacred Troy, and raz'd her heav'n-built wall. Pope.

HEAVEN-DIRECTED.

1. Raiſed towards the ſky.

Who taught that heaven-directed ſpire to riſe? Pope.

2. Taught by the powers of heaven.

O ſacred weapon! left our truth's defence;
To all but heaven-directed hands deny'd;
The muſe may give it, but the gods muſt guide. Pope.

HE'AVENLY. adj. [from heaven.]

1. Reſembling heaven; ſupremely excellent.

As the love of heaven makes one heavenly, the love of virtue virtuous, ſo doth the love of the world make one become worldly. Sidney.

Not Maro's muſe, who ſung the mighty man;
Nor Pindar's heav'nly lyre, nor Horace when a ſwan. Dryd.

2. Celeſtial; inhabiting heaven.

Adoring firſt the genius of the place,
Then earth, the mother of the heav'nly race. Dryden.

HE'AVENLY. adv.

1. In a manner reſembling that of heaven.

In theſe deep ſolitudes and awful cells,
Where heav'nly penſive contemplation dwells,
And ever-muſing melancholy reigns,
What means this tumult in a veſtal's veins? Pope.

into a monarchy; for the materials thereof were extant before, namely, under the heptarchy. Hale.

The next returning planetary hour
Of Mars, who shar'd the heptarchy of pow'r,
His steps bold Arcite to the temple bent. Dryden.

HER. pron. [þeꝛa, heꝛ, in Saxon, stood for their, or of them, which at length became the female possessive.]

1. Belonging to a female; of a she; of a woman.

About his neck
A green and gilded snake had wreath'd itself,
Who with her head, nimble in threats, approach'd
The opening of his mouth. Shakespeare.

Still new favourites she chose,
'Till up in arms my passion rose,
And cast away her yoke. Cowley.

One month, three days, and half an hour,
Judith held the sov'reign pow'r;
Wond'rous beautiful her face;
But so weak and small her wit,
That she to govern were unfit,
And so Susanna took her place. Cowley.

2. The oblique case of she.

England is so idly king'd,
Her sceptre so fantastically borne,
That fear attends her not. Shakespeare.

She cannot seem deform'd to me,
And I would have her seem to others so. Cowley.

The moon arose clad o'er in light,
With thousand stars attending on her train;
With her they rise, with her they set again. Cowley.

Should I be left, and thou be lost, the sea,
That bury'd her I lov'd, should bury me. Dryden.

HERS. pronoun. This is used when it refers to a substantive going before: as, such are her charms, such charms are hers.

This pride of hers,
Upon advice, hath drawn my love from her. Shakespeare.

Will still that thou art mine not hers confess. Cowley.

Some secret charm did all her acts attend,
And what his fortune wanted, hers could mend. Dryden.

I bred you up to arms, rais'd you to power,
Indeed to save a crown, not hers, but yours. Dryden.

HE'RALD. n. s. [herault, French; herald, German.]

1. An officer whose business it is to register genealogies, adjust ensigns armorial, regulate funerals, and anciently to carry messages between princes, and proclaim war and peace.

May none, whose scatter'd names honour my book,
For strict degrees of rank or title look;
'Tis 'gainst the manners of an epigram,
And I a poet here, no herald am. Ben. Johnson.

When time shall serve, let but the herald cry,
And I'll appear again. Shakespeare.

After my death I wish no other herald,
No other speaker of my living actions,
But such an honest chronicler as Griffith. Shakespeare.

Embassador of peace, if peace you chuse;
Or herald of a war, if you refuse. Dryden.

Please thy pride, and search the herald's roll,
Where thou shalt find thy famous pedigree. Dryden.

2. A precursor; a forerunner; a harbinger.

It is the part of men to fear and tremble,
When the most mighty gods, by tokens, send
Such dreadful heralds to astonish us. Shakespeare.

It was the lark, the herald of the morn. Shakespeare.

To HE'RALD. v. a. [from the noun.] To introduce as an herald. A word not used.

We are sent.
To give thee from our royal master thanks;

HE'RDSMAN. } ing herds: formerly, an owner of herds.

A herdsman rich, of much account was he,
In whom no evil did reign, or good appear. Sidney.

And you, enchantment,
Worthy enough a herdsman, if e'er thou
These rural latches to his entrance open,
I will devise a death cruel for thee. Shakespeare.

Scarce themselves know how to hold
A sheephook, or have learn'd ought else the least
That to the faithful herdman's art belongs. Milton.

There oft the Indian herdsman, shunning heat,
Shelters in cool, and tends his pasturing herds
At loop-holes cut through thickest shade. Milton.

So stands a Thracian herdsman with his spear
Full in the gap, and hopes the hunted bear. Dryden.

The herdsmen, round
The chearful fire, provoke his health in goblets crown'd.
Dryden's Virgil's Georgicks.

When their herdsmen could not agree, they parted by consent. Locke.

How came her eyes ſo bright? not with ſalt tears;
If ſo, my eyes are oftener waſh'd than hers. Shakeſpeare.

Whom ill fate would ruin, it prefers;
For all the miſerable are made hers. Waller.

I ſee her rowling eyes;
And panting, lo! the god, the god, ſhe cries;
With words not hers, and more than human ſound,
She makes th' obedient ghoſts peep trembling through the ground. Roſcommon.

HERSE. n. ſ. [herſia, low Latin; ſuppoſed to come from þejian, to praiſe.]

1. A temporary monument raiſed over a grave.

2. The carriage in which corpſes are drawn to the grave.

When mourning nymphs attend their Daphnis' herſe,
Who does not weep that reads the moving verſe? Roſcommon.

Crowds of dead in decent pomp are born;
Their friends attend the herſe, the next relations mourn. Dryden's Virgil.

On all the line a ſudden vengeance waits,
And frequent herſes ſhall beſiege your gates. Pope.

To HERSE. v. a. [from the noun.] To put into a herſe.

I would my daughter were dead at my foot, and the jewels in her ear. O, would ſhe were hers'd at my foot, and the ducats in her coffin. Shakeſpeare.

The Grecians ſpritefully drew from the darts the corſe,
And hers'd it, bearing it to fleet. Chapman.

The houſe is hers'd about with a black wood,
Which nods with many a heavy-headed tree:
Each flower's a pregnant poiſon, try'd and good;
Each herb a plague. Croſhaw.

HERSELF. pronoun. The female perſonal pronoun, in the oblique caſes reciprocal.

The jealous o'er-worn widow and herſelf,
Since that our brother dubb'd them gentlewomen,

Nile hears him knocking at his ſev'nfold gates,
And ſeeks his hidden ſpring, and fears his nephews fates. Dr.

Thus the fire of gods and men below:
What I have lidden, hope not thou to know. Dryden.

The ſev'ral parts lay lidden in the piece;
Th' occaſion but exerted that, or this. Dryden.

Then for my corps a homely grave provide;
Which love and me from publick ſcorn may hide. Dryden.

Seas hid with navies, chariots paſſing o'er
The channel, on a bridge from ſhore to ſhore. Dryden.

With what aſtoniſhment and veneration may we look into our own ſouls, where there are ſuch hidden ſtores of virtue and knowledge, ſuch inexhauſted ſources of perfection. Addiſon.

The crafty being makes a much longer voyage than Ulyſſes, puts in practice many more wiles, and hides himſelf under a greater variety of ſhapes. Addiſon.

Hell trembles at the ſight, and hides its head
In utmoſt darkneſs, while on earth each heart
Is filled with peace. Rowe.

To HIDE. v. n. To lye hid; to be concealed.

A fox, that had been hard run, begged of a countryman, at work in a wood, to help him to ſome hiding place. L'ſtrange.

Our bolder talents in full view diſplay'd;
Your virtues open faireſt in the ſhade:
Bred to diguiſe, in publick 'tis you hide,
Where none diſtinguiſh 'twixt your ſhame and pride,
Weakneſs or delicacy. Pope.

HIDE and SEEK. n. ſ. A play in which ſome hide themſelves, and another ſeeks them.

The boys and girls would venture to come and play at hide and ſeek in my hair. Swift.

HI'GLAPER. n. ſ. An herb. Ainſworth.

HILA'RITY. n. ſ. [hilaritas, Latin.] Merriment; gayety.

Averroes reſtrained his hilarity, and made no more thereof than Seneca commendeth, and was allowable in Cato; that is, a ſober incaleſcence from wine. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

HILD, in Ælrick's grammar, is interpreted a lord or lady: ſo Hildebert is a noble lord; Mathild, an heroick lady; and in the ſame ſenſe is Wiga alſo found. Gibſon.

HI'LDING. n. ſ. [þilð, Saxon, ſignifies a lord; perhaps hilding means originally a little lord in contempt, for a man that has only the delicacy or bad qualities of high rank; or a term of reproach abbreviated from binderling, degenerate. Hugh's Spenſ.]

1. A ſorry, paltry, cowardly fellow.

He was ſome hilding fellow, that had ſtol'n
The horſe he rode on. Shakeſpeare.

If your lordſhip find him not a hilding, hold me no more in your reſpect. Shakeſpeare.

Your are cubb'd from that enlargement by
The conſequence o' th' crown, and muſt not foil
The precious note of it with a baſe ſlave,
A hilding for a livery, a ſquire's cloth. Shakeſpeare.

This idle toy, this hilding ſcorns my power,
And ſets us all at naught. Rowe.

2. It is uſed likewiſe for a mean woman.

Laura, to his lady, was but a kitchen wench;
Helen and Hero, hildings and harlots. Shakeſpeare.

HILL. n. ſ. [þil, Saxon.] An elevation of ground leſs than a mountain.

My ſheep are thoughts, which I both guide and ſerve;
Their paſture is fair hills of fruitleſs love. Sidney.

Jeruſalem is ſeated on two hills,
Of height unlike, and turned ſide to ſide. Fairfax.

Three ſides are ſure imbar'd with crags and hills,
The reſt is eaſy, ſcant to riſe eſpy'd;
But mighty bulkwarks ſenſe the plainer part:
So art helps nature, nature ſtrengtheneth art. Fairfax.

When our eye ſome proſpect would purſue,

A hill is nothing but the neſt of ſome metal or mineral, which, by a plaſtick virtue and the efficacy of ſubterranean fires, converting the adjacent earths into their ſubſtance, do increaſe and grow. Cheyne.

HI'LLOCK. n. ſ. [from hill.] A little hill.

Yet weigh this, alas! great is not great to the greater:
What, judge you, doth a hillock ſhow by the lofty Olympus! Sidney.

Sometime walking not unſeen
By hedge-row elms, on hillocks green. Milton.

This mountain, and a few neighbouring hillocks that lie ſcattered about the bottom of it, is the whole circuit of theſe dominions. Addiſon.

HI'LLY. adj. [from hill.] Full of hills; unequal in the ſurface.

Towards the hilly corners of Druina remain yet her very Aborigenes, fatally thruſt amongſt an aſſembly of mountains. Howel.

Climbing

Climbing to a hilly ſteep,
He views his herds in vales afar. Dryden.
Lo! how the Norick plains
Riſe hilly, with large piles of ſlaughter'd knights. Philips.
Hilly countries afford the moſt entertaining proſpects, tho' a man would chuſe to travel through a plain one. Addiſon.

HILT. n. ſ. [ꝥilt, Saxon, from ꝥealban, to hold.] The handle of any thing, particularly of a ſword.
Now ſits expectation in the air,
And hides a ſword from hilt unto the point,
With crowns imperial; crowns and coronets,
Promis'd to Harry and his followers. Shakeſpeare.
Take thou the hilt,
And when my face is cover'd, as 'tis now,
Guide thou the ſword. Shakeſpeare.
Be his this ſword, whoſe blade of braſs diſplays
A ruddy gleam; whoſe hilt, a ſilver blaze. Pope.

He put the handmaids and their children foremoſt, and Leah and her children after, and Rachel and Joſeph hindermoſt. Gen.
Like to an enter'd tide, they all ruſh by,
And leave you hindermoſt. Shakeſpeare.

HI'NDMOST. adj. [hind and moſt.] The laſt; trailing, that which comes in the rear.
'Tis not his wont to be the hindmoſt man,
Whate'er occaſion keeps him from us now. Shakeſpeare.
He met thee by the way, and ſmote the hindmoſt of thee, even all that were feeble behind. Deuteronomy.
Let him retire, betwixt two ageſt caſt,
The firſt of this, and hindmoſt of the laſt,
A loſing gameſter. Dryden.
The race by vigour, not by vaunts is won;
So take the hindmoſt, hell—he ſaid, and run, Pope.

HINGE. n. ſ. [or hingle, from hangle or hang.]
1. Joints upon which a gate or door turns.
At the gate
Of heav'n arriv'd, the gate ſelf-open'd wide,
On golden hinges turning. Milton.
Then from the hinge their ſtrokes the gates divorce,
And where the way they cannot find, they force. Denham.
Heav'n's imperious queen ſhot down from high;
At her approach the brazen hinges fly,
The gates are forc'd. Dryden.
2. The cardinal points of the world, eaſt, weſt, north, and ſouth.
If when the moon is in the hinge at eaſt,
The birth breaks forward from its native reſt;
Full eighty years, if you two years abate,
This ſtation gives. Creech.
And theſe being hinges of the world, create
New powers in ſtars. Creech.
3. A governing rule or principle.
The other hinge of puniſhment might turn upon a law, whereby all men, who did not marry by the age of five and twenty, ſhould pay the third part of their revenue. Temple.
4. To be off the HINGES. To be in a ſtate of irregularity and diſorder.
The man's ſpirit is out of order and off the hinges; and 'till that be put into its right frame, he will be perpetually diſquieted. Tillotſon.

To HINGE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To furniſh with hinges.
2. To bend as an hinge.
Be thou a flatt'rer now, and hinge thy knee;
And let his very breath whom thou'lt obſerve,
Blow off thy cap. Shakeſpeare.

To HINT. v. a. [enter, French. Skinner.] To bring to mind by a ſlight mention or remote alluſion; to mention imperfectly.

These considerations, proposed in general terms, I am sure, madam, you will, by particular application, bring home to your own concern. Wake.

4. To the point designed; to the utmost; closely; fully.

Crafty enough either to hide his faults, or never to shew them, but when they might pay home. Sidney.

In fell motion,
With his prepared sword he charges home
My unprovided body. Shakespeare.

A loyal sir
To him thou follow'st: I will pay thy graces
Home both in word and deed. Shakespeare.

Her cause and yours
I'll perfect him withal; and he shall bring you
Before the duke, and to the head of Angelo
Accuse him home and home. Shakespeare.

Men of age object too much, adventure too little, and seldom drive business home to the full period; but content themselves with a mediocrity of success. Bacon.

That cometh up home to the business, and taketh off the objection clearly. Sanderson.

Break through the thick array
Of his throng'd legions, and charge home upon him. Addis.

He makes choice of some piece of morality; and in order to press this home, he makes less use of the force of reasoning. Pope.

I can only refer the reader to the authors themselves, who speak very home to the point. Atterbury.

5. United to a substantive, it implies force and efficacy.

Poison may be false;
The home thrust of a friendly sword is sure. Dryden.

I am sorry to give him such home thrusts; for he lays himself so open, and uses so little art to avoid them, that I must either do nothing, or expose his weakness. Stillingfleet.

HOMEBO'RN. adj. [home and born.]

1. Native; natural.

Though to be thus elemented, arm
These creatures from homeborn intrinsick harm. Donne.

I can you tidings tell. Spenser.

This once happy land,
By homebred fury rent, long groan'd. Phillips.

HO'MEFELT. adj. [home and felt.] Inward; private.

Yet they in pleasing slumber lull'd the sense,
And in sweet madness rob'd it of itself;
But such a sacred and homefelt delight,
Such sober certainty of waking bliss,
I never heard 'till now. Milton.

Happy next him who to these shades retires,
Whom nature charms, and whom the muse inspires,
Whom humbler joys of homefelt quiet please,
Successive study, exercise, and ease. Pope.

HO'MELILY. adv. [from homely.] Rudely; inelegantly;

HO'MELINESS. n. s. [from homely.] Plainness; rudeness; coarseness.

Homer has opened a great field of raillery to men of more delicacy than greatness of genius, by the homeliness of some of his sentiments. Addison.

HO'MELY. adj. [from home.] Plain; homespun; not elegant, not beautiful; not fine; coarse; rude.

Each place handsome without curiosity, and homely without loathsomeness. Sidney.

Within this wood, out of a rock did rise
A spring of water, mildly tumbling down;
Whereto approached not in any wise
The homely shepherd, nor the ruder clown. Spenser.

Like rich hangings in an homely house,
So was his will in his old feeble body. Shakespeare.

Be plain, good son, and homely in thy drift:
Riddling confession finds but riddling shrift. Shakespeare.

Home-keeping youth have ever homely wits. Shakespeare.

Our stomachs will make what's homely savoury. Shakespeare.

It is for homely features to keep home;
They had their name thence. Milton.

It is observed by some, that there is none so homely but loves a looking-glass. Suckling.

Their homely fare dispatch'd, the hungry band
Invade their trenches next. Dryden.

HO'MESTEAD. } the house.

Both house and homestead into seas are born,
And rocks are from their old foundations torn. Dryden.

HO'MEWARD. } adv. [ham and peand, Saxon.] Towards
HO'MEWARDS. } home; towards the native place; towards the place of residence.

Then Urania homeward did arise,
Leaving in pain their well-fed hungry eyes. Sidney.

My affairs
Do even drag me homeward. Shakespeare.

Since such love's natural station is, may still
My love descend, and journey down the hill,
Not panting after growing beauties; so
I shall ebb on with them who homeward go. Donne.

Look homeward, angel now, and melt with ruth; Milton.
And, O ye dolphins, waft the hapless youth!

Like a long team of snowy swans on high,
Which clap their wings, and cleave the liquid sky,
Which homeward from their wat'ry pastures born,
They sing, and Asia's lakes their notes return. Dryden.

What now remains,
But that once more we tempt the wat'ry plains,
And, wand'ring homewards, seek our safety hence. Dryden.

HO'MICIDE. n. s. [homicide, French; homicidium, Latin.]

1. Murder; manquelling.

The apostles command to abstain from blood: construe this according to the law of nature, and it will seem, that homicide only is forbidden; but construe it in reference to the law of the Jews, about which the question was, and it shall easily appear to have a clean other sense, and a truer, when we expound it of eating, and not of shedding blood. Hooker, b. iv.

2. Destruction.

2. Deſtruction. In the following lines it is not proper.

What wonder is't that black detraction thrives!
The homicide of names is leſs than lives. Dryden.

3. [Homicide, Fr. homicida, Lat.] A murderer; a manſlayer.

Your beauty, that did hunt me in my ſleep,
To undertake the death of all the world,
So might I live one hour in your ſweet boſom.
——If I thought that, I tell thee, homicide,
Theſe nails ſhould rend that beauty from my cheeks. Shak.
Hector comes, the homicide, to wield
His conqu'ring arms, with corps to ſtrew the field. Dryden.

HOMICI'DAL. adj. [from homicide.] Murderous; bloody.

The troop forth iſſuing from the dark receſs,
With homicidal rage, the king oppreſs. Pope.

HOMILE'TICAL. adj. [ὁμιλητικὸς.] Social; converſible.

His life was holy, and, when he had leiſure for retirements, ſevere: his virtues active chiefly, and homiletical; not thoſe lazy ſullen ones of the cloyſter. Atterbury.

HO'MILY. n. ſ. [homilie, French; ὁμιλία.] A diſcourſe read to a congregation.

Homilies were a third kind of readings uſual in former times; a moſt commendable inſtitution, as well then to ſupply the caſual, as now the neceſſary defect of ſermons. Hooker.

What tedious homily of love have you wearied your pariſhioners withal, and never cried, have patience, good people. Shakeſpeare.

If we ſurvey the homilies of the ancient church, we ſhall diſcern that, upon feſtival days, the ſubject of the homily was conſtantly the buſineſs of the day. Hammond.

HOMOGE'NEAL. } adj. [homogene, Fr. ὁμογενὴς.] Having HOMOGE'NEOUS. } the ſame nature or principles; ſuitable to each other.

The means of reduction, by the fire, is but by congregation of homogeneal parts. Bacon.

Ice is a ſimilary body, and homogeneous concretion, whoſe material is properly water. Brown.

An homogeneous maſs of one kind is eaſily diſtinguiſhable from any other; gold from iron, ſulphur from alum, and ſo of the reſt. Woodward.

The light, whoſe rays are all alike refrangible, I call ſimple, homogeneal, and ſimilar; and that whoſe rays are ſome more refrangible than others, I call compound, heterogeneal, and diſſimilar. Newton.

HOMOGE'NEALNESS. }
HOMOGENE'ITY. } n. ſ. [from homogeneous, or homogeneal.] Participation of the ſame principles or HOMOGE'NEOUSNESS. } nature; ſimilitude of kind.

The mixtures acquire a greater degree of fluidity and ſimilarity, or homogeneity of parts. Arbuthnot.

Upon this ſuppoſition of only different diameters, it is impoſſible to account for the homogeneity or ſimilarity of the ſecerned liquors. Cheyne.

HO'MOGENY. n. ſ. [ὁμογενία.] Joint nature.

By the driving back of the principal ſpirits, which preſerve the conſiſtence of the body, their government is diſſolved, and every part returneth to his nature or homogeny. Bacon.

HOMO'LOGOUS. adj. [homologue, Fr. ὁμόλογος.] Having the ſame manner or proportions.

HOMO'NYMOUS. adj. [homonyme, Fr. ὁμώνυμος.] Denominating different things; equivocal; ambiguous.

As words ſignifying the ſame thing are called ſynonymous, ſo equivocal words, or thoſe which ſignify ſeveral things, are called homonymous, or ambiguous; and when perſons uſe ſuch ambiguous words, with a deſign to deceive, it is called equivocation. Watts.

HOMO'NYMY. n. ſ. [homonymie, French; ὁμωνυμία.] Equivocation; ambiguity.

HOMO'TONOUS. adj. [ὁμοτόνος.] Equable: ſaid of ſuch diſtempers as keep a conſtant tenour of riſe, ſtate, and declenſion. Quincy.

HONE. n. ſ. [This word M. Caſaubon derives from ἀκονὴ; Junius from hogſaen, Welch; Skinner, who is always rational, from þæn, Saxon, a ſtone; þænan, to ſtone.] A whetſtone for a raſor.

A hone and a parer, to pare away graſs. Tuſſer.

To HONE. v. n. [þonzian, Saxon.] To pine; to long for any thing.

HONEST. adj. [honeſte, French; honeſtus, Latin.]

1. Upright; true; ſincere.

What art thou?
——A very honeſt hearted fellow, and as poor as the king. Sh.

The way to relieve ourſelves from thoſe ſophiſms, is an honeſt and diligent enquiry into the real nature and cauſes of things. Watts.

2. Chaſte.

Wives may be merry, and yet honeſt too. Shakeſp.

3. Juſt; righteous; giving to every man his due.

4. It is ſometimes uſed criminally for diſhoneſt; baſe.

I'll deviſe ſome honeſt ſlanders
To ſtain my couſin with: one doth not know
How much an ill word doth impoiſon liking. Shakeſpeare.

HO'NESTLY. adv. [from honeſt.]

1. Uprightly; juſtly.

It doth make me tremble,
There ſhould thoſe ſpirits yet breathe, that when they cannot Live honeſtly, would rather periſh baſely. Ben Johnſ.

For ſome time paſt all endeavours or propoſals from private perſons to advance the publick ſervice, however honeſtly and innocently deſigned, have been called flying in the king's face. Swift.

2. With chaſtity; modeſtly.

HO'NESTY. n. ſ. [honneſteté, French; honeſtas, Latin.] Juſtice; truth; virtue; purity.

Thou ſhalt not have thy huſband's lands.
——Why, then mine honeſty ſhall be my dower. Shakeſpeare.

Goodneſs, as that which makes men prefer their duty and their promiſe before their paſſions or their intereſt, and is properly the object of truſt, in our language goes rather by the name of honeſty; though what we call an honeſt man, the Romans called a good man; and honeſty in their language, as well as in French, rather ſignifies a compoſition of thoſe qualities which generally acquire honour and eſteem. Temple.

HO'NIED. adj. [from honey.]

1. Covered with honey.

The bee with honied thigh,
That at her flow'ry work doth ſing. Milton.

2. Sweet; luſcious.

When he ſpeaks,
The air, a charter'd libertine, is ſtill;
And the mute wonder lurketh in mens ears,
To ſteal his ſweet and honied ſentences. Shakeſpeare.
Look now for no enchanting voice, nor fear
The bait of honey'd words; a rougher tongue

HO'NEY. n. ſ. [þunıȝ, Sax. honig, Du. honec, honag, German.]

1. A thick, viſcous, fluid ſubſtance, of a whitiſh or yellowiſh colour, ſweet to the taſte, ſoluble in water; and becoming vinous on fermentation, inflammable, liquable by a gentle heat, and of a fragrant ſmell. We have three kinds of honey: the firſt and fineſt is virgin honey, not very firm, and of a fragrant ſmell: it is the firſt produce of the ſwarm, obtained by draining from the combs without preſſing. The ſecond is thicker than the firſt, often almoſt ſolid, procured from the combs by preſſure: and the worſt is the common yellow honey, extracted by heating the combs over the fire, and then preſſing them. In the flowers of plants, by certain glands near the baſis in the petals, is ſecreted a ſweet juice, which the bee, by means of its proboſis or trunk, ſucks up, ſwallows it, flies away with it to the hive, and diſcharges again from the ſtomach through the mouth into ſome of the cells of the comb. The honey thus taken up into the body of the bee, and depoſited again into the cells of the comb, is deſtined for the food of the young offspring; but in hard ſeaſons the bees are ſometimes reduced to the neceſſity of feeding on it themſelves, and die of hunger after they have eat it all up. Honey, taken out of the new combs early in the ſummer, is vaſtly preferable to that taken from the ſame hive in Autumn. Honey is an excellent pectoral, is detergent, aperient, and diuretick. Hill.

So work the honey bees,
Creatures that by a ruling nature teach
The art of order to a peopled kingdom. Shakeſpeare.

The like contention is found among the Greeks, touching his education and firſt foſtering: ſome affirm that he was fed by honey bees. Raleigh.

In ancient time there was a kind of honey, which, either of its own nature, or by art, would grow as hard as ſugar, and was not ſo luſcious as ours. Bacon.

When the patient is rich, there's no fear of phyſicians about him as thick as waſps to a honey pot. L'Eſtr.

Honey is the moſt elaborate production of the vegetable kind, being a moſt exquiſite vegetable ſope, reſolvent of the bile, balſamick and pectoral: honey contains no inflammable ſpirit, before it has felt the force of fermentation; for by diſtillation it affords nothing that will burn in the fire. Arbuth.

New wine, with honey temper'd milk we bring;
Then living waters from the cryſtal ſpring. Pope.

2. Sweetneſs; luſciouſneſs.

The king hath found
Matter againſt him that for ever mars
The honey of his language. Shakeſpeare.
A honey tongue, a heart of gall,
Is fancy's ſpring, but ſorrow's fall. Shakeſpeare.

3. A name of tenderneſs; ſweet; ſweetneſs. [Mel; corculum.]

Honey, you ſhall be well deſir'd in Cyprus;
I've found great love amongſt them. Oh, my ſweet,
I prattle out of faſhion, and I dote
In mine own comfort. Shakeſpeare.

Why, honey bird, I bought him on purpoſe for thee: did'ſt not thou ſay, thou long'dſt for a Chriſtian ſlave? Dryden.

To HO'NEY. v. n. [from the noun.] To talk fondly.

Nay, but to live
In the rank ſweat of an inceſtuous bed,
Stew'd in corruption, honeying and making love
Over the naſty ſty. Shakeſpeare.

Ho'NEY-BAG. n. ſ. [honey and bag.]

The honey-bag is the ſtomach, which they always fill to ſatisfy, and to ſpare, vomiting up the greater part of the honey to be kept againſt winter. Grew.

Ho'NEY-COMB. n. ſ. [honey and comb.] The cells of wax in which the bee ſtores her honey.

All theſe a milk-white honey-comb ſurround,
Which in the midſt the country banquet crown'd. Dryden.

Ho'NEY-COMBED. adj. [honey and comb.] Spoken of a piece of ordnance flawed with little cavities by being ill caſt.

A mariner having diſcharged his gun, which was honey-combed, and loading it ſuddenly again, the powder took fire. Wiſeman.

Ho'NEY-DEW. n. ſ. [honey and dew.] Sweet dew.

There is a honey-dew which hangs upon their leaves, and breeds inſects. Mortimer.

How honey-dews embalm the fragrant morn,
And the fair oak with luſcious ſweets adorn. Garth.

Ho'NEY-FLOWER. n. ſ. [melanthus, Latin.] A plant.

It hath a perennial root, and the appearance of a ſhrub: the leaves are like thoſe of burnet; the cup of the flower is divided into ſeveral parts: the flower conſiſts of four leaves, and is of an anomalous figure, ſometimes in the ſhape of a fan, and at other times conical: the ovary becomes a fruit, reſembling a bladder four cornered, divided into four cells, and pregnant with roundiſh ſeeds. This plant produces large ſpikes of chocolate-coloured flowers in May, in each of which is contained a large quantity of black ſweet liquor, from whence it is ſuppoſed to derive its name. Miller.

Ho'NEY-GNAT. n. ſ. [mellio, Latin; honey and gnat.] An inſect. Ainſworth.

Ho'NEY-MOON. n. ſ. [honey and moon.] The firſt month after marriage, when there is nothing but tenderneſs and pleaſure.

A man ſhould keep his finery for the latter ſeaſon of marriage, and not begin to dreſs 'till the honey-moon is over. Addiſ.

Ho'NEY-SUCKLE. n. ſ. [caprifolium, Latin.] Woodbine.

It hath a climbing ſtalk, which twiſts itſelf about whatſoever tree ſtands near it: the flowers are tubulous and oblong, conſiſting of one leaf, which opens towards the top, and is divided into two lips; the uppermoſt of which is ſubdivided into two, and the lowermoſt is cut into many ſegments: the tube of the flowers is bent, ſomewhat reſembling a huntſman's horn. They are produced in cluſters, and are very ſweet. Miller enumerates ten ſpecies, of which three grow wild in our hedges.

Bid her ſteal into the pleached bower,
Where honey-ſuckles, ripen'd by the ſun,
Forbid the ſun to enter; like to favourites,
Made proud by princes, that advance their pride
Againſt the power that bred it. Shakeſpeare.

Watch upon a bank
With ivy canopied, and interwove
With flaunting honeyſuckle. Milton.

Then melfoil beat, and honey-ſuckles pound;
With theſe alluring ſavours ſtrew the ground. Dryden.

Ho'NEYLESS. adj. [from honey.] Without honey.

But for your words, they rob the Hybla bees,
And leave them honeyleſs. Shakeſpeare.

Ho'NEY-WORT. n. ſ. [cerinthe, Latin.] A plant.

It hath glaucous deep green leaves, which are, for the moſt part, beſet with prickles: the flowers are cylindrical, conſiſting of one leaf, in ſhape like thoſe of comfrey, and are pendulous: each flower turns to the top of the ſecond page of the third leaf following. Miller.

Ho'NORARY. adj. [honorarius, Latin.]

1. Done in honour.

There was probably ſome diſtinction made among the Romans between ſuch honorary arches erected to emperors, and thoſe that were raiſed to them on the account of a victory, which are properly triumphal arches. Addiſon.

This monument is only honorary; for the aſhes of the emperor lie elſewhere. Addiſon.

2. Conferring honour without gain.

The Romans abounded with theſe little honorary rewards, that, without conferring wealth and riches, gave only place and diſtinction to the perſon who received them. Adaiſon.

HO'NOUR. n. ſ. [honeur, French; honor, Latin.]

1. Dignity; high rank.
2. Reputation; fame.

A man is an ill huſband of his honour, that entereth into any action, the failing wherein may diſgrace him more than the carrying of it through can honour him. Bacon.

3. The title of a man of rank.

Return unto my lord,
Bid him not fear the ſeparated councils:
His honour and myſelf are at the one;
And at the other is my good friend Cateſby. Shakeſpeare.

4. Subject of praiſe.

Thou happy father,
Think that the cleareſt gods, who make them honours
Of man's impoſſibilities, have preſerv'd thee. Shakeſp.

5. Nobleneſs of mind; ſcorn of meanneſs; magnanimity.

Now ſhall I ſee thy love; what motive may
Be ſtronger with thee than the name of wife?
—That which upholdeth him, that thee upholds,
His honour. Oh, thine honour, Lewis; thine honour. Shakeſpeare.

If by honour is meant any thing diſtinct from conſcience, 'tis no more than a regard to the cenſure and eſteem of the world. Rogers.

6. Reverence; due veneration.

They take thee for their mother,
And every day do honour to thy grave. Shakeſpeare.

There, my lord,
The high promotion of his grace of Canterbury,
Who holds his ſtate at door, 'mongſt purſuivants.
——Ha! 'tis he, indeed!
Is this the honour they do one another? Shakeſpeare.

This is a duty in the fifth commandment, required towards our prince and our parent, under the name of honour; a reſpect, which, in the notion of it, implies a mixture of love and fear, and, in the object, equally ſuppoſes goodneſs and power. Regers.

7. Chaſtity.

Be ſhe honour flaw'd,
I have three daughters, the eldeſt is eleven;
If this prove true, they'll pay for't. Shakeſpeare.

She dwells ſo ſecurely on the excellency of her honour, that the folly of my ſoul dares not prevent itſelf: ſhe is too bright to be looked againſt. Shakeſpeare.

8. Dignity of mien.

Two of far nobler ſhape, erect and tall,
Godlike erect! with native honour clad,
In naked majeſty, ſeem'd lords of all. Milton.

9. Glory; boaſt.

A late eminent perſon, the honour of his profeſſion for integrity and learning. Burnet.

10. Publick mark of reſpect.

He ſaw his friends, who whelm'd beneath the waves,
Their fun'ral honours claim'd, and aſk'd their quiet graves. Dryden.

Such diſcourſes, on ſuch mournful occaſions as theſe, were inſtituted not ſo much in honour of the dead, as for the uſe of the living. Atterbury.

Numbers engage their lives and labours, ſome to heap together a little dirt that ſhall bury them in the end; others to gain an honour, that, at beſt, can be celebrated but by an inconſiderable part of the world, and is envied and calumniated by more than 'tis truly given. Wake.

11. Privileges of rank or birth.

Henry the ſeventh, truly pitying
My father's loſs, like a moſt royal prince,
Reſtor'd me to my honours; and, from ruins,
Made my name once more noble. Shakeſpeare.

12. Civilites paid.

Then here a ſlave, or if you will a lord,
To do the honours, and to give the word. Pope.

How lov'd, how honour'd once, avails thee not. Pope.

2. To dignify; to raiſe to greatneſs.

In ſoothing them, we nouriſh 'gainſt our ſenate
The cockle of rebellion, inſolence, ſedition,
Which we ourſelves have plow'd for, ſow'd and ſcatter'd,
By mingling them with us, the honour'd number. Shakeſp.

I will harden Pharaoh's heart, that he ſhall follow after them, and I will be honoured upon Pharaoh, and upon all his hoſt, that the Egyptians may know that I am the Lord. Ex. xiv.

HONOURABLE. adj. [honorable, French.]

1. Illuſtrious; noble.

Sir, I'll tell you,
Since I am charg'd in honour, and by him
That I think honourable. Shakeſpeare.

Who hath taken this counſel againſt Tyre, the crowning city, whoſe merchants are princes, whoſe traffickers are the honourable of the earth? Iſ. xxiii. 8.

2. Great; magnanimous; generous.

[illegible] rable for a nobleman
Still [illegible] Shakeſpeare.

3. Con[illegible] for their country fought,
At [illegible] ttle brought. Dryden.

HO'NOURER. n. ſ. [from honour.] One that honours; one that regards with veneration.

I muſt not here omit to do juſtice to Mr. Gay, whoſe zeal in your concern is worthy a friend and honourer. Pope.

HOOD, in compoſition, is derived from the Saxon ꝑad, in German heit, in Dutch h·id. It denotes quality; character; condition: as, knighthood; childhood; fatherhood. Sometimes it is uſed after the Dutch, as maidenhead. Sometimes it is taken collectively: as, brotherhood, a confraternity; ſiſterhood, a company of ſiſters.

HOOD. n. ſ. [ꝑoꝺ, Saxon, probably from ꝑeꝛꝺoꝺ, head.]

1. The upper covering of a woman's head.

In velvet, white as ſnow, the troop was gown'd;
Their hoods and ſleeves the ſame. Dryden.

2. Any thing drawn upon the head, and wrapping round it.

Undertaking ſo to geſture and muffle up himſelf in his hood, as the duke's manner was to ride in cold weather, that none ſhould diſcern him. Wotton.

The lacerna came, from being a military habit, to be a common dreſs: it had a hood, which could be ſeparated or joined to it. Arbuthnot.

3. A covering put over the hawk's eyes, when he is not to fly.

4. An ornamental fold that hangs down the back of a graduate, to mark his degree.

To HOOD. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To dreſs in a hood.

The cobler apron'd, and the parſon gown'd,
The friar hooded, and the monarch crown'd. Pope.

2. To blind, as with a hood.

While grace is ſaying, I'll hood mine eyes
Thus with my hat, and ſigh, and ſay, amen. Shakeſp.

3. To cover.

An hollow cryſtal pyramid he takes,
In firmamental waters dipt above;
Of it a broad extinguiſher he makes,
And hoods the flames that to their quarry ſtrove. Dryd.

HO'ODMAN's Blind. n. ſ. A play in which the perſon hooded is to catch another, and tell the name; blindman's buff.

What devil was't

The whole ſtands ſtill, or breaks to pieces. Prior.

HO'RARY. adj. [horaire, French; horarius, Latin.]

1. Relating to an hour.

I'll draw a figure that ſhall tell you
What you perhaps forgot befell you,
By way of horary inſpection,
Which ſome account our worſt erection. Hudibras.

In his anſwer to an horary queſtion, as what hour of the night to ſet a fox-trap, he has largely diſcuſſed, under the character of Reynard, the manner of ſurpriſing all ſharpers. Tatler.

2. Continuing for an hour.

When, from a baſket of ſummer-fruit, God by Amos foretold the deſtruction of his people, thereby was declared the propinquity of their deſolation, and that their tranquility was of no longer duration than thoſe horary or ſoon decaying fruits of ſummer. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

HORDE. n. ſ. A clan; a migratory crew of people.

Of loſt mankind, in poliſh'd ſlavery ſunk,
Drove martial horde on horde with dreadful ſweep,
And gave the vanquiſh'd world another form. Thomſon.

HORI'ZON. n. ſ [ὁρίζων.] The line that terminates the view.

The horizon is diſtinguiſhed into ſenſible and real: the ſenſible horizon is the circular line which limits the view; the real is that which would bound it, if it could take in the hemiſphere. It is falſely pronounced by Shakeſpeare hórizon.

When the morning ſun ſhall raiſe his car
Above the border of this horizon,
We'll forward towards Warwick and his mates. Shakeſp.

She began to caſt with herſelf from what coaſt this blazing ſtar ſhould firſt appear, and at what time it muſt be upon the horizon of Ireland. Bacon's Henry VII.

Far in th' horizon to the North appear'd,
From ſkirt to ſkirt, a fiery region. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

In his Eaſt the glorious lamp was ſeen,
Regent of day; and all th' horizon round
Inveſted with bright rays. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

The

The morning lark, the meſſenger of day,
Saluted in her ſong the morning gray;
And ſoon the ſun aroſe with beams ſo bright,
That all th' horizon laugh'd to ſee the joyous ſight. Dryden.

When the ſea is worked up in a tempeſt, ſo that the horizon on every ſide is nothing but foaming billows and floating mountains, it is impoſſible to deſcribe the agreeable horrour that riſes from ſuch a proſpect. Addiſon's Spectator.

HORIZO'NTAL. adj. [horizontal, French; from horizon.]

1. Near the horizon.

As when the ſun, new riſen,
Looks through the horizontal miſty air,
Shorn of his beams; or from behind the moon,
In dim eclipſe, diſaſtrous twilight ſheds
On half the nations. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

2. Parallel to the horizon; on a level.

An obeliſk erected, and golden figures placed horizontal about it, was brought out of Egypt by Auguſtus. Brown.

The problem is reduced to this; what perpendicular height is neceſſary to place ſeveral ranks of rowers in a plane inclined to a horizontal line in a given angle? Arbuthnot on Coins.

HORIZO'NTALLY. adv. [from horizontal.] In a direction parallel to the horizon.

As it will not ſink into the bottom, ſo will it neither float above, like lighter bodies; but, being near in weight, lie ſuperficially, or almoſt horizontally unto it. Brown's Vulg. Errours.

The ambient ether is too liquid and empty to impel them horizontally with celerity. Bentley's Sermons.

Humility to ſerve their pride, and ſeem
Humble upon their way, to be the prouder
At their wiſh'd journey's end. Denham.

It is an eaſy matter, when there is no danger of a trial, to extol humility in the midſt of honours, or to begin a faſt after dinner. South.

As high turrets, for their airy ſteep,
Require foundations in proporiion deep;
And lofty cedars as far upwards ſhoot,
As to the nether heavens they drive the root;
So low did her ſecure foundation lye,
She was not humble, but humility. Dryden.

2. Act of ſubmiſſion.

With theſe humilities they ſatisfied the young king, and by their bowing and bending avoided the preſent ſtorm. Davies.

The wit ſinks imperceptibly into an humoriſt, Spectator.

This humoriſt keeps to himſelf much more than he wants, and gives a vaſt refuſe of his ſuperfluities to purchaſe heaven. Addiſon's Spectator.

The notion of a humoriſt is one that is greatly pleaſed, or greatly diſpleaſed, with little things; his actions ſeldom directed by the reaſon and nature of things. Watts.

2. One who has violent and peculiar paſſions.

By a wiſe and timous inquiſition the peccant humours and humoriſts muſt be diſcovered and purged, or cut off: mercy, in ſuch a caſe, in a king, is true cruelty. Bacon.

HU'MOROUS. adj. [from humour.]

1. Full of groteſque or odd images.

Some of the commentators tell us, that Marſya was a lawyer who had loſt his cauſe; others that this paſſage alludes to the ſtory of the ſatire Marſyas, who contended with Apollo, which I think is more humorous. Addiſon on Italy.

Thy humorous vein, thy pleaſing folly,
Lies all neglected, all forgot;
And penſive, wav'ring, melancholy,
Thou dread'ſt and hop'ſt thou know'ſt not what. Prior.

2. Capricious; irregular; without any rule but the preſent whim.

I am known to be a humorous patrician; ſaid to be ſomething imperfect, in favouring the firſt complaint; haſty and tinder-like, upon too trivial motion. Shakeſpeare.

Thou fortune's champion, that do'ſt never fight
But when her humorous ladyſhip is by,
To teach thee ſafety. Shakeſpeare.

He's humorous as winter, and as ſudden
As flaws congeal'd in the ſpring of day. Shakeſpeare.

O, you awake then: come away,
Times be ſhort, are made for play;
The humorous moon too will not ſtay:
What doth make you thus delay? Ben. Johnſon.

Vaſt is his courage, boundleſs is his mind,
Rough as a ſtorm, and humorous as the wind. Dryden.

He that would learn to paſs a juſt ſentence on perſons and things, muſt take heed of a fanciful temper of mind, and an humorous conduct in his affairs. Watts.

The aqueous humour of the eye will not freeze, which is very admirable, ſeeing it hath the perſpicuity and fluidity of common water. Ray.

2. The different kind of moiſture in man's body, reckoned by the old phyſicians to be phlegm, blood, choler, and melancholy, which, as they predominated, were ſuppoſed to determine the temper of mind.

Believe not theſe ſuggeſtions, which proceed
From anguiſh of the mind and humours black;
That mingle with thy fancy. Milton.

3. General turn or temper of mind.

As there is no humour, to which impudent poverty cannot make itſelf ſerviceable; ſo were there enow of thoſe of deſperate ambition, who would build their houſes upon others ruin. Sidney.

There came with her a young lord, led hither with the humour of youth, which ever thinks that good whoſe goodneſs he ſees not. Sidney.

King James, as he was a prince of great judgment, ſo he was a prince of a marvellous pleaſant humour: as he was going through Luſen by Greenwich, he aſked what town it was; they ſaid Luſen. He aſked, a good while after, what town is this we are now in? They ſaid ſtill it was Luſen: ſaid the king, I will be king of Luſen. Bacon.

Examine how your humour is inclin'd,
And which the ruling paſſion of your mind. Roſcommon.

They, who were acquainted with him, know his humour to be ſuch, that he would never conſtrain himſelf. Dryden.

Good humour only teaches charms to laſt,
Still makes new conqueſts, and maintains the paſt. Pope.

4. Preſent diſpoſition.

It is the curſe of kings to be attended
By ſlaves, that take their humours for a warrant
To break into the blood-houſe of life. Shakeſpeare.

Another thought her nobler humour fed. Fairfax.

Their humours are not to be won,
But when they are impos'd upon. Hudibras.

Tempt not his heavy hand;
But one ſubmiſſive word which you let fall,
Will make him in good humour with us all. Dryden.

5. Groteſque imagery; jocularity; merriment.

6. Diſeaſed or morbid diſpoſition.

He was a man frank and generous; when well, denied himſelf nothing that he had a mind to eat or drink, which gave him a body full of humours, and made his fits of the gout frequent and violent. Temple.

7. Petulance; peeviſhneſs.

Is my friend all perfection, all virtue and diſcretion? Has he not humours to be endured, as well as kindneſſes to be enjoyed? South.

8. A trick; a practice.

I like not the humour of lying: he hath wronged me in ſome humours: I ſhould have born the humour'd letter to her. Shakeſpeare.

9. Caprice; whim; predominant inclination.

In private, men are more bold in their own humours; and in conſort, men are more obnoxious to others humours; therefore it is good to take both. Bacon.

To HU'MOUR. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To gratify; to ſooth by compliance,

For juſtice they had a bench under a tree, where Ket uſually ſat, and with him two of every hundred whence their companies had been raiſed: here complaints were exhibited. Hayw.

HU'NDREDTH. adj. [ꝑunꝺꝛeonzeoꝛꝺa, Saxon.] The ordinal of an hundred; the tenth ten times told.

We ſhall not need to uſe the hundredth part of that time, which themſelves beſtow in making invectives. Hooker.

If this medium is rarer within the ſun's body than at its ſurface, and rarer there than at the hundredth part of an inch from its body, and rarer there than at the orb of Saturn, I ſee no reaſon why the increaſe of denſity ſhould ſtop any where. Newton's Opt.

HUNG. The preterite and part. paſſ. of hang.

A wife ſo hung with virtues, ſuch a freight,
What mortal ſhoulders can ſupport! Dryden.

A room that is richly adorned, and hung round with a great variety of pictures, ſtrikes the eye at once. Watts.

HU'NGER. n. ſ. [ꝑungeꝛ, Saxon; honger, Dutch.]

1. Deſire of food; the pain felt from faſting.

An uneaſy ſenſation at the ſtomach for food. When the ſtomach is empty, and the fibres in their natural tenſion, they draw up ſo cloſe as to rub againſt each other, ſo as to make that ſenſation: but when they are diſtended with food, it is again removed; unleſs when a perſon faſteth ſo long as for want of ſpirits, or nervous fluid, to have thoſe fibres grow too flaccid to corrugate, and then we ſay a perſon has faſted away his ſtomach; and this is occaſioned by the attrition of the coats of the ſtomach againſt each other. Quincy.

Thou ſhalt ſerve thine enemies in hunger and in thirſt. Deuteronomy.

The ſub-acid part of the animal ſpirits, being caſt off by the lower nerves upon the coats of the ſtomach, vellicates the fibres, and thereby produces the ſenſe we call hunger. Grew.

Something viſcous, fat and oily, remaining in the ſtomach, deſtroys the ſenſation of hunger. Arbuthnot.

2. Any violent deſire.

The immaterial felicities we expect, do naturally ſuggeſt the neceſſity of preparing our appetites and hungers for them, without which heaven can be no heaven to us. Decay of Piety.

To HU'NGER. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To feel the pain of hunger.

Widely they gape, and to the eye they roar,
As if they hunger'd for the food they bore. Cowley.

2. To deſire with great eagerneſs.

Do'ſt thou ſo hunger for my empty chair,
That thou wilt needs inveſt thee with my honours,
Before thy hour be ripe? O, fooliſh youth,
Thou ſeek'ſt the greatneſs that will overwhelm thee!
Stay but a little. Shakeſpeare.

My more having, would be as a ſauce
To make me hunger more. Shakeſpeare.

I content me
And from the ſting of famine fear no harm,
Nor mind it, fed with better thoughts that feed
Me hung'ring more to do my father's will. Milton.

HU'NGERBIT. } adj. [hunger and bit.] Pained or weak-
HU'NGERBITTEN. } ened with hunger.

His ſtrength ſhall be hungerbitten, and deſtruction ſhall be ready at his ſide. Job.

Thyſelf

Loſt in a deſert here, and hungerbit. Milton.

HU'NGERLY. adj. [from hunger.] Hungry; in want of nouriſhment.

His beard
Grew thin and hungerly, and ſeem'd to aſk
His ſops as he was drinking. Shakeſpeare.

HU'NGERLY. adv. With keen appetite.

You have ſav'd my longing, and I feed
Moſt hungerly on your ſight. Shakeſpeare.

They are all but ſtomachs, and we all but food;
They eat us hungerly, and, when they're full,
They belch us. Shakeſpeare.

HU'NGERSTARVED. adj. [hunger and ſtarved.] Starved with hunger; pinched by want of food.

All my followers to th' eager foe
Turn back, and fly like ſhips before the wind,
Or lambs purſu'd by hungerſtarved wolves.
Shakeſpeare's Henry VI.

O'ertake me, if thou can'ſt; I ſcorn thy ſtrength:
Go, go, chear up thy hungerſtarved men. Shakeſp.

As to ſome holy houſe th' afflicted came,
Th' hungerſtarv'd, the naked, and the lame,
Want and diſeaſes, fled before her name. Dryden.

HU'NGRED. adj. [from hunger.] Pinched by want of food.

Odours do in a ſmall degree nouriſh, and we ſee men an hungred love to ſmell hot bread. Bacon.

HU'NGRILY. adv. [from hungry.] With keen appetite.

Thus much to the kind rural gods we owe,
Who pity'd ſuff'ring mortals long ago;
When on harſh acorns hungrily they fed,
And gave 'em nicer palates, better bread. Dryden.

HU'NGRY. adj. [from hunger.]

1. Feeling pain from want of food.

That face of his the hungry cannibals
Would not have touch'd, would not have ſtain'd with blood.
Shakeſpeare's Henry VI.

They that talk thus may ſay that a man is always hungry, but that he does not always feel it; whereas hunger conſiſts in that very ſenſation. Locke.

2. Not fat; not fruitful; not prolifick; more diſpoſed to draw from other ſubſtances than to impart to them.

Caſſius has a lean and hungry look. Shakeſpeare.

The more fat water will bear ſoap beſt; for the hungry water doth kill its unctuous nature. Bacon.

In ruſhy grounds ſprings are found at the firſt and ſecond ſpit, and ſometimes lower in a hungry gravel. Mortimer.

To this great day of retribution our Saviour refers us, for reaping the fruits that we here ſow in the moſt hungry and barren ſoil. Smalridge.

HUNKS. n. ſ. [hunſkur, ſordid, Iſlandick.] A covetous ſordid wretch; a miſer; a curmudgeon.

The old hunks was well ſerved, to be tricked out of a whole hog for the ſecuring of his puddings. L'Eſtrange.

She has a huſband, a jealous, covetous, old hunks. Dryden.

Irus has given all the intimations of being a cloſe hunks, worth money. Addiſon.

To HUNT. v. a. [þuntian, Saxon, from þunb, a dog.]

1. To chaſe wild animals.

The man that once did ſell the lion's ſkin,
While the beaſt liv'd, was kill'd in hunting him. Shakeſp.

Wilt thou hunt the prey for the lion, or fill the appetite of the young lions? Job.

We ſhould ſingle every criminal out of the herd, and hunt him down, however formidable and overgrown; and, on the contrary, ſhelter and defend virtue. Addiſon.

2. To purſue; to follow cloſe.

Evil ſhall hunt the violent man to overthrow him. Pſalms.

The heart ſtrikes five hundred ſorts of pulſes in an hour, and is hunted unto ſuch continual palpitations, through anxiety that fain would it break. Harvey.

3. To ſearch for.

Not certainly affirming any thing, but by conferring of times and monuments, I do hunt out a probability. Spenſer.

All that is found in books is not rightly deduced from the principles it is pretended to be built upon: ſuch an examen every reader's mind is not forward to make, eſpecially in thoſe who have given themſelves up to a party, and only hunt for what may favour and ſupport the tenets of it. Locke.

4. To direct or manage hounds in the chace.

He hunts a pack of dogs better than any, and is famous for finding hares. Addiſon.

To HUNT. v. n.

1. To follow the chaſe.

When he returns from hunting,
I will not ſpeak with him. Shakeſpeare.

Eſau went to the field to hunt for veniſon. Geneſis.

On the old pagan tombs maſks, hunting matches, and Bacchanals are very common. Addiſon.

2. To purſue or ſearch.

Very much of kin to this is the hunting after arguments to make good one ſide of a queſtion, and wholly to neglect and refuſe thoſe which favour the other ſide. Locke.

HUNT. n. ſ. [from the verb.]

1. A pack of hounds.

The common hunt, though from their rage reſtrain'd
By ſov'reign pow'r, her company diſdain'd,
Grinn'd as they paſs. Dryden.

2. A chace.

The hunt is up, the morn is bright and gray;
The fields are fragrant, and the woods are green. Shakeſp.

3. Purſuit.

I've heard myſelf proclaim'd;
And by the happy hollow of a tree,
Eſcap'd the hunt. Shakeſpeare.

HU'NTER. n. ſ. [from hunt.]

1. One who chaſes animals for paſtime.

If thoſe Engliſh lords had been good hunters, and reduced the mountains, boggs, and woods within the limits of foreſts, chaces and parks, the foreſt law would have driven them into the plains. Davies.

Down from a hill the beaſt that reigns in woods,
Firſt hunter then, purſu'd a gentle brace,
Goodlieſt of all the foreſt, hart and hind. Milton.

Another's crimes th' unhappy hunter bore,
Glutting his father's eyes with guiltleſs gore. Dryden.

This was the arms or device of our old Roman hunters; a paſſage of Manilius lets us know the pagan hunters had Meleager for their patron. Addiſon.

Bold Nimrod firſt the ſavage chace began,
A mighty hunter, and his game was man. Pope.

2. A dog that ſcents game or beaſts of prey.

Of dogs, the valu'd file
Diſtinguiſhes the ſwift, the ſlow, the ſubtle,
The houſekeeper, the hunter. Shakeſpeare.

HU'NTINGHORN. n. ſ. [hunting and horn.] A bugle; a horn uſed to cheer the hounds.

Whilſt a boy, Jack ran from ſchool,
Fond of his huntinghorn and pole. Prior.

HU'NTRESS. n. ſ. [from hunter.] A woman that follows the chace.

And thou thrice crowned queen of night, ſurvey
With thy chaſte eye, from thy pale ſphere above,
Thy huntreſs' name, that my full life doth ſway. Shakeſp.

Shall I call
Antiquity from the old ſchools of Greece,
To teſtify the arms of chaſtity?
Hence had the huntreſs Dian her dread bow,
Fair ſilver-ſhafted queen, for ever chaſte. Milton.

Let old Arcadia boaſt her ample plain,
Th' immortal huntreſs, and her virgin train;
Nor envy Windſor. Pope.

Homer repreſents Diana with her quiver at her ſhoulder; but at the ſame time he deſcribes her as an huntreſs. Broome.

HU'NTSMAN. n. ſ. [hunt and man.]

1. One who delights in the chace.

Like as a huntſman, after weary chace,
Seeing the game eſcape from him away,
Sits down to reſt him. Spenſer.

Such game, whilſt yet the world was new,
The mighty Nimrod did purſue:
What huntſman of our feeble race,
Or dogs, dare ſuch a monſter chace? Waller.

2. The ſervant whoſe office it is to manage the chace.

Apply this moral rather to the huntſman, that managed the chace, than to the maſter. L'Eſtrange.

HU'NTSMANSHIP. n. ſ. [from huntſman.] The qualifications of a hunter.

At court your fellows every day
Give th' art of rhiming, huntſmanſhip, or play. Donne.

1. To throw with violence; to drive impetuouſly.

If heav'ns have any grievous plagues in ſtore,
O, let them keep it 'till thy ſins be ripe,
And then hurl down their indignation
On thee. Shakeſpeare.

He holds vengeance in his hand,
To hurl upon their heads that break his law.
Shakeſpeare's Richard III.

I with my nails digg'd ſtones out of the ground,
To hurl at the beholders of my ſhame. Shakeſpeare.

If he thruſt him of hatred, or hurl at him by laying of wait. Numbers.

They uſe both the right hand and the left in hurling ſtones. Chronicles.

Hurl ink and wit,
As madmen ſtones. Ben. Johnſon.

His darling ſons,
Hurl'd headlong to partake with us, ſhall curſe
Their frail original and faded bliſs. Milton.

She ſtrikes the lute; but if it ſound,
Threatens to hurl it on the ground. Waller.

Corrupted light of knowledge hurl'd
Sin, death, and ignorance o'er all the world. Denham.

Young Phaeton,
From eaſt to north irregularly hurl'd,
Firſt ſet himſelf on fire, and then the world. Dryden.

Conjure him far to drive the Grecian train,
And hurl them headlong to their fleet and main. Pope.

2. To utter with vehemence. [Hurler, French, to make an howling or hideous noiſe.]

The glad merchant that does view

HU'RLWIND. n. ſ. [hurl and wind.] A whirlwind; a violent guſt. A word not in uſe.

Like ſcatter'd down by howling Eurus blown,
By rapid hurlwinds from his manſion thrown. Sandys.

HU'RLY. HU'RLYBURLY. n. ſ. [I have been told that this word owes its original to two neighbouring families named Hurly and Burley, or Hurleigh and Burleigh, which filled their part of the kingdom with conteſts and violence. If this account be rejected, the word muſt be derived from hurl, hurly, and burly, a ludicrous reduplication. Hurlade, French; burlubrelu, inconſiderately.] Tumult; commotion; buſtle.

Winds take the ruffian billows by the top,
That with the hurley death itſelf awakes. Shakeſp.

Poor diſcontents,
Which gape and rub the elbow at the news
Of hurlyburly innovation. Shakeſpeare.

Methinks,

Methinks, I ſee this hurly all on foot. Shakeſpeare.

All places were filled with tumult and hurlyburly, every man meaſured the danger by his own fear; and ſuch a pitiful cry was in every place, as in cities preſently to be beſieged. Knolles.

HU'RRICANE. } n. ſ. [huracan, Spaniſh; ouragan, French.] A
HU'RRICANO. } violent ſtorm, ſuch as is often experienced in the eaſtern hemiſphere.

Blow winds, and crack your cheeks;
Your cataracts and hurricanoes ſpout. Shakeſpeare.

A ſtorm or hurricano, though but the force of air, makes a ſtrange havock where it comes. Burnet.

A poet who had a great genius for tragedy, made every man and woman too in his plays ſtark raging mad: all was tempeſtuous and bluſtering; heaven and earth were coming together at every word; a mere hurricane from the beginning to the end. Dryden.

The miniſters of ſtate, who gave us law,
In corners with ſelected friends withdraw;
There, in deaf murmurs, ſolemnly are wiſe,
Whiſp'ring like winds, ere hurricanes ariſe. Dryden.

So, where our wide Numidian waſtes extend,
Sudden th' impetuous hurricanes deſcend,
Wheel through the air, in circling eddies play,
Tear up the ſands, and ſweep whole plains away. Addiſon.

Or else our spell is marr'd. Shakespeare.

HUSH. adj. [from the interjection.] Still; silent; quiet.

As we often see, against some storm,
A silence in the heav'ns, the rack stand still,
The bold winds speechless, and the orb below
As hush as death. Shakespeare.

To HUSH. v. n. [from the interjection.] To be still; to be silent.

This frown'd, that fawn'd, the third for shame did blush;
Another seemed envious or coy;
Another in her teeth did gnaw a rush;
But at these strangers presence every one did hush. Spenser.

To HUSH. v. a. To still; to silence; to quiet; to appease.

Yet can I not of such tame patience boast,
As to be husht, and nought at all to say. Shakespeare.

It was my breath that blew this tempest up,
Upon your stubborn usage of the pope;
But since you are a gentle convertite,
My tongue shall hush again this storm of war,
And make fair weather in your blust'ring land. Shakesp.

Speak softly;
All's husht as midnight yet. Shakespeare.

My love would speak; my duty hushes me. Shakespeare.

When in a bed of straw we shrink together,
And the bleak winds shall whistle round our heads,
Wilt thou then talk thus to me? Wilt thou then
Hush my cares thus, and shelter me with love? Otway.

Hush'd as midnight silence go;
He will not have your acclamations now. Dryden.

The ſuitors heard, and deem'd the mirthful voice
A ſignal of her hymeneal choice. Pope.

HYMN. n. ſ. [hymne, Fr. ὕμνος.] An encomiaſtick ſong, or ſong of adoration to ſome ſuperiour being.

As I earſt, in praiſe of mine own dame,
So now in honour of thy mother dear,
An honourable hymn I eke ſhould frame. Spenſer.
Our ſolemn hymns to ſullen dirges change;
Our bridal flow'rs ſerve for a buried coarſe. Shakeſpeare.
When ſteel grows
Soft as the paraſite's ſilk, let hymns be made
An overture for the wars. Shakeſpeare.

There is an hymn ſung; but the ſubject of it is always the praiſes of Adam, and Noah and Abraham, concluding ever with a thankſgiving for the nativity of our Saviour. Bacon.

Farewel, you happy ſhades,
Where angels firſt ſhould practiſe hymns, and ſtring
Their tuneful harps, when they to heav'n would ſing. Dr.

To HYMN. v. a. [ὑμνέω.] To praiſe in ſong; to worſhip with hymns.

To HYMN. v. n. To ſing ſongs of adoration.

They touch'd their golden harps, and hymning prais'd
God and his works. Milton.

He had not left alive this patient ſaint,
This anvil of affronts, but ſent him hence
To hold a peaceful branch of palm above,
And hymn it in the quire. Dryden.

HYMNICK. adj. [ὕμνος.] Relating to hymns.

He rounds the air, and breaks the hymnick notes
In birds, heav'n's choriſters, organick throats;
Which, if they did not die, might ſeem to be
A tenth rank in the heavenly hierarchy. Donne.

To HYP. v. a. [barbarouſly contracted from hypochondriack.] To make melancholy; to diſpirit.

I have been, to the laſt degree, hypped ſince I ſaw you. Spec.

HY'PALLAGE. n. ſ. [ὑπαλλαγὴ.] A figure by which words change their caſes with each other.

HY'PER. n. ſ. [A word barbarouſly curtailed by Prior from hypercritick.] A hypercritick; one more critical than neceſſity requires. Prior did not know the meaning of the word.

Criticks I read on other men,
And hypers upon them again. Prior.

HYPE'RBOLA. n. ſ. [hyperbole, Fr. ὑπερ and βαλλω.] In geometry, a ſection of a cone made by a plane, ſo that the axis of the ſection inclines to the oppoſite leg of the cone, which in the parabola is parallel to it, and in the ellipſis interſects it. The axis of the hperybolical ſection will meet alſo with the oppoſite ſide of the cone, when produced above the vertex. Harris.

Had the velocities of the ſeveral planets been greater or leſs than they are, or had their diſtances from the ſun, or the quantity of the ſun's matter, and conſequently his attractive power, been greater or leſs than they are now, with the ſame velocities, they would not have revolved in concentrick circles, but have moved in hyperbola's very eccentrick. Bentley.

HY'PERBOLE. n. ſ. [hyperbole, Fr. ὑπερβολὴ.] A figure in rhetorick by which any thing is increaſed or diminiſhed beyond the exact truth: as, he runs faſter than lightning. His poſſeſſions are fallen to duſt. He was ſo gaunt the caſe of a flagellet was a manſion for him. Shakeſp.

Terms unſquar'd,
Which, from the tongue of roaring Typhon dropt,
Would ſeem hyperboles. Shakeſpeare.

Taffata phraſes, ſilken terms preciſe,
Three pil'd hyperboles, ſpruce affectation,
Figures pedantical, theſe ſummer flies,
Have blown me full of maggot oſtentation. Shakeſp.

They were above the hyperboles, that fond poetry beſtows upon its admired objects. Glanville.

Hyperboles, ſo daring and ſo bold,
Diſdaining bounds, are yet by rules control'd;
Above the clouds, but yet within our ſight,
They mount with truth, and make a tow'ring flight. Granv.

The common people underſtand raillery, or at leaſt rhetorick, and will not take hyperboles in too literal a ſenſe. Swift.

HYPERBO'LICAL. } adj. [hyperbolique, French; from hyperbola.]
HYPERBO'LICK. }

1. Belonging to the hyperbola; having the nature of an hyperbola.

Cancellated in the middle with ſquares, with triangles before, and behind with hyperbolick lines. Grew.

The horny or pellucid coat of the eye riſeth up, as a hillock, above the convexity of the white of the eye, and is of an hyperbolical or parabolical figure. Ray.

2. [Form hyperbole.] Exaggerating or extenuating beyond fact.

It is parabolical, and probably hyperbolical, and therefore not to be taken in a ſtrict ſenſe. Boyle.

HYPERBO'LICALLY. adv. [from hyperbolical.]

1. In form of an hyperbola.
2. With exaggeration or extenuation.

Yet may all be ſolved, if we take it hyperbolically. Brown.

Scylla is ſeated upon a narrow mountain, which thruſts into the ſea a ſteep high rock, and hyperbolically deſcribed by Homer as inacceſſible. Broome.

HYPERBO'LIFORM. adj. [hyperbola and forma.] Having the form, or nearly the form of the hyperbola.

HYPERBO'REAN. n. ſ. [hyperboréen, French; hyperboreus, Lat.] Northern.

HYPERCRI'TICK. n. ſ. [hypercritique, Fr. ὑπερ and κριτικος.] A critick exact or captious beyond uſe or reaſon.

Thoſe hypercriticks in Engliſh poetry differ from the opinion of the Greek and Latin judges of antiquity, from the Italians and French, and from the general taſte of all ages. Dryden.

HYPERCRI'TICAL. adj. [from hypercritick.] Critical beyond neceſſity or uſe.

We are far from impoſing thoſe nice and hypercritical punctilio's, which ſome aſtrologers oblige our gardeners to. Evelyn.

Such hypercritical readers will conſider my buſineſs was to make a body of refined ſayings, only taking care to produce them in the moſt natural manner. Swift.

HYPE'RMETER. n. ſ. [ὑπερ and μέτρον.] Any thing greater than the ſtandard requires.

When a man riſes beyond ſix foot, he is an hypermeter, and may be admitted into the tall club. Addiſon.

HYPERSARCO'SIS. n. ſ. [ὑπερσάρκωσις, ὑπερ and σαρκὸς.] The growth of fungous or proud fleſh.

Where the hyperſarcoſis was great, I ſprinkled it with precipitate, whereby I more ſpeedily freed the ulcer of its putrefaction. Wiſeman.

HY'PHEN. n. ſ. [ὕφεν.] A note of conjunction: as, vir-tue, ever-living.

HYPNO'TICK. n. ſ. [ὕπνος.] Any medicine that induces ſleep.

HYPOCHO'NDRES. n. ſ. [hypocondre, Fr. ὑπ χόνδρου.] The two regions lying on each ſide the cartilago enſiformis, and thoſe of the ribs, and the tip of the breaſt, which have in one the liver, and in the other the ſpleen. Quincy.

The blood moving too ſlowly through the celiack and meſenterick arteries, produce various complaints in the lower bowels and hypochondres; from whence ſuch perſons are called hypochondriack. Arbuthnot.

HYPOCHONDRI'ACAL. } adj. [hypocondriaque, French; from HYPOCHONDRI'ACK. } hypochondres.]

1. Melancholy; diſordered in the imagination.

Socrates laid down his life in atteſtation of that moſt fundamental truth, the belief of one God; and yet he's not recorded either as fool or hypochondriack. Decay of Piety.

2. Producing melancholy.

Cold ſweats are many times mortal, and always ſuſpected; as in great fears, and hypochondriacal paſſions, being a relaxation or forſaking of the ſpirits. Bacon.

HY'POCIST. n. ſ. [ὑποκίστις; hypociſte, French.]

Hypociſt is an inſpiſſated juice in large flat maſſes, conſiderably hard and heavy, of a fine ſhining black colour, when broken. It is brought from the Levant, ſometimes from France, and other parts of Europe. The ſtem of the plant, from which it is produced, is thick and fleſhy; and, what is ſingular, much thicker at the top than towards the bottom. The fruits contain a tough glutinous liquor, which are gathered before they are ripe; and the juice is expreſſed, then evaporated over a gentle fire, formed into cakes, and dried in the ſun. It is an aſtringent medicine of conſiderable power. Hill.

HYPO'CRISY. n. ſ. [hypocriſie, Fr. ὑπόκρισις.] Diſſimulation with regard to the moral or religious character.

Next ſtood hypocriſy with holy leer
Soft ſmiling and demurely looking down;
But hid the dagger underneath the gown. Dryden.

Hypocriſy is much more eligible than open infidelity and vice: it wears the livery of religion, and is cautious of giving ſcandal: nay, continued diſguiſes are too great a conſtraint: men would leave off their vices, rather than undergo the toil of practiſing them in private. Swift.

HY'POCRITE. n. ſ. [hypocrite, French; ὑποκρίτης.] A diſſembler in morality or religion.

He heartily prays ſome occaſion may detain us longer: I dare ſwear he is no hypocrite, but prays from his heart. Shak.

A wiſe man hateth not the law; but he that is an hypocrite therein, is as a ſhip in a ſtorm. Eccluſ.

Fair hypocrite, you ſeek to cheat in vain;
Your ſilence argues, you aſk time to reign. Dryden.

The making religion neceſſary to intereſt might increaſe hypocriſy; but if one in twenty ſhould be brought to true piety, and nineteen be only hypocrites, the advantage would ſtill be great. Swift.

Beware, ye honeſt: the third circling glaſs
Suffices virtue: but may hypocrites,
Who ſlily ſpeak one thing, another think,
Hateful as hell, ſtill pleas'd unwarn'd drink on,
And through intemp'rance grow a while ſincere. Philips.

HYPOCRI'TICAL. } adj. [from hypocrite.] Diſſembling; inſin-
HYPOCRI'TICK. } cere; appearing differently from the reality.

Now you are confeſſing your enormities; I know it by that hypocritical, down-caſt look. Dryden.

Whatever virtues may appear in him, they will be eſteemed an hypocritical impoſture on the world: and in his retired pleaſures, he will be preſumed a libertine. Rogers.

Let others ſkrew their hypocritick face. Swift.

HYPOCRI'TICALLY. adv. [from hypocritical.] With diſſimulation; without ſincerity; falſely.

Simeon and Levi ſpake not only falſely, but inſidiouſly, nay hypocritically, abuſing at once their proſelytes and their religion. Government of the Tongue.

HYPOGA'STRICK. adj. [hypogaſtrique, French; ὑπο and γαστὴρ.] Seated in the lower part of the belly.

The ſwelling we ſuppoſed to riſe from an effuſion of ſerum through all the hypogaſtrick arteries. Wiſeman.

HYPOGE'UM. n. ſ. [ὑπο and γῆ.] A name which the ancient architects gave to all the parts of a building that were under ground, as cellars and vaults. Harris.

HYPO'STASIS. n. ſ. [hypoſtaſe, French; ὑπόστασις.]

1. Diſtinct ſubſtance.
2. Perſonality. A term uſed in the doctrine of the Holy Trinity.

The oneneſs of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, referring to the ſeveral hypoſtaſes in the one eternal, indiviſible, divine nature, and the eternity of the Son's generation, and his co-eternity and conſubſtantiality with the Father, are aſſertions equivalent to thoſe before compriſed in the ancient more ſimple article. Hammond.

HYPOSTA'TICAL. adj. [hypoſtatique, French; from hypoſtaſis.]

1. Conſtitutive; conſtituent as diſtinct ingredients.

Let our Carneades warn men not to ſubſcribe to the grand doctrine of the chemiſts, touching their three hypoſtatical principles, 'till they have a little examined it. Boyle.

2. Perſonal; diſtinctly perſonal.

HYPOTENU'SE. n. ſ. [hypotenuſe, Fr. ὑποτείνουσα.] The line that ſubtends the right angle of a right-angled triangle; the ſubtenſe.

The ſquare of the hypotenuſe in a right-angled triangle, is equal to the ſquares of the two other ſides. Locke.

HYPO'THESIS. n. ſ. [hypotheſe, Fr. ὑπόθεσις.] A ſuppoſition; a ſyſtem formed upon ſome principle not proved.

The mind caſts and turns itſelf reſtleſsly from one thing to another, 'till at length it brings all the ends of a long and various hypotheſis together; ſees how one part coheres with another, and ſo clears off all the appearing contrarieties that ſeemed to lie croſs, and make all the whole intelligible. South.

With imagin'd ſovereignty
Lord of his new hypotheſis he reigns:
He reigns: how long? 'till ſome uſurper riſe;
And he too, mighty thoughtful, mighty wiſe,
Studies new lines, and other circles feigns. Prior.

HYPOTHE'TICAL. } adj. [hypothetique, Fr. from hypotheſis.] In-HYPOTHE'TICK. } cluding a ſuppoſition; conditional.

Conditional or hypothetical propoſitions are thoſe whoſe parts are united by the conditional particle if; as, if the ſun be fixed, the earth muſt move. Watts.

HYPOTHE'TICALLY. adv. [from hypothetical.] Upon ſuppoſition; conditionally.

The only part liable to imputation is calling her a goddeſs; yet this is propoſed with modeſty and doubt, and hypothetically. Broome.

HYRST, }
HURST, } Are all from the Saxon ὑῤῥτ, a wood or grove. Gibſ.
HERST, }

HY'SSOP. n. ſ. [hyſſope, Fr. hyſſopus, Latin.] A verticillate plant, with long narrow leaves: the creſt of the flower is roundiſh, erect, and divided into two parts: the beard is divided into three parts; the middle part is hollowed like a ſpoon, having a double point, and is ſomewhat winged; the whorles of the flowers are ſhort, and at the lower part of the ſtalk are placed at a great diſtance; but toward the top are cloſer joined, ſo as to form a regular ſpike. It hath been a great diſpute whether the hyſſop commonly known is the ſame which is mentioned in Scripture. Miller.

The hyſſop of Solomon cannot be well conceived to be our common hyſſop; for that is not the leaſt of vegetables obſerved to grow upon walls; but rather ſome kind of capillaries, which only grow upon walls and ſtony places. Brown.

HYSTE'RICAL. } adj. [hyſterique, French; ὑστερικὸς.]
HYSTE'RICK. }

1. Troubled with fits; diſordered in the regions of the womb.

In hyſterick women the rarity of ſymptoms doth oft ſtrike ſuch an aſtoniſhment into ſpectators, that they report them poſſeſſed with the devil. Harvey.

Many hyſterical women are ſenſible of wind paſſing from the womb. Floyer.

2. Proceeding from diſorders in the womb.

Parent of vapours, and of female wit,
Who gave th' hyſterick or poetick fit. Pope.

This terrible ſcene made too violent an impreſſion upon a woman in her condition, and threw her into a ſtrong hyſterick fit. Arbuthnot and Pope.

HYSTE'RICKS. n. ſ. [ὑστερικὸς.] Fits of women, ſuppoſed to proceed from diſorders in the womb.

I.

I Is in Engliſh conſidered both as a vowel and conſonant; though, ſince the vowel and conſonant differ in their form as well as ſound, they may be more properly accounted two letters.

I vowel has a long ſound, as fine, thine, which is uſually marked by an e final; and a ſhort ſound, as fin, thin. Prefixed to e it makes a diphthong of the ſame ſound with the ſoft i, or double e, ee: thus field, yield, are ſpoken as feeld, yeeld; except friend, which is ſpoken frend. Subjoined to a or e it makes them long, as fail, neigh; and to o makes a mingled ſound, which approaches more nearly to the true notion of a diphthong, or ſound compoſed of the ſounds of two vowels, than any other combination of vowels in the Engliſh language, as oil, coin. The ſound of i before another i, and at the end of a word, is always expreſſed by y.

J conſonant has invariably the ſame ſound with that of g in giant; as jade, jet, jilt, jolt, juſt.

I. pronoun perſonal. [ik, Gothick; ic, Saxon; ich, Dutch.]

I, gen. me; plural we; gen. us.

ic, me, ge, ur.

1. The pronoun of the firſt perſon, myſelf.

I do not like theſe ſeveral councils, I. Shakeſp.

There is none greater in his houſe than I. Geneſis.

Be of good cheer, it is I; be not afraid. Matthew.

What ſhall I do to be for ever known,
And make the age to come my own?
I ſhall like beaſts or common people dye,
Unleſs you write my elegy. Cowley.

Hence, and make room for me. Cowley.

When chance of buſineſs parts us two,
What do our ſouls, I wonder, do? Cowley.

Of that book you have given us a large earneſt. Cowley.

Thus, having paſs'd the night in fruitleſs pain,
I to my longing friends return again. Dryden.

2. Me is in the following paſſage written for I.

There is but one man whom ſhe can have, and that is me. Clariſſa.

3. I is more than once in Shakeſpeare written for ay, or yes.

Hath Romeo ſlain himſelf; Say thou but I,
And that bare vowel, I, ſhall poiſon more
Than the death-darting eye of cockatrice. Shakeſpeare.

Did your letters pierce the queen?
—I, ſir; ſhe took 'em and read 'em in my preſence,
And now and then an ample tear trill'd down. Shakeſp.

To JA'BBER. v. n. [gabberen, Dutch.] To talk idly; to prate without thinking; to chatter.

We ſcorn, for want of talk, to jabber
Of parties. Swift.

JA'BBERER. n. ſ. [from jabber.] One who talks inarticulately or unintelligibly.

Out cant the Babylonian labourers
At all their dialects of jabberers. Hudibras.

JA'CENT. adj. [jacens, Latin.] Lying at length.

So laid, they are more apt in ſwagging down to pierce than in the jacent poſture. Wotton.

JACI'NTH. n. ſ. [for hyacinth, as Jeruſalem for Hieruſalem.]

1. The ſame with hyacinth.

2. A gem of a deep rediſh yellow approaching to a flame colour, or the deepeſt amber. Woodward.

JACK. n. ſ. [Probably by miſtake from Jaques, which in French is James.]

1. The diminutive of John. Uſed as a general term of contempt for ſaucy or paltry fellows.

I am in eſtimation:
You will perceive that a Jack gardant cannot
Office me from my ſon Coriolanus. Shakeſpeare.

I have in my mind
A thouſand raw tricks of theſe bragging Jacks,
Which I will practiſe. Shakeſpeare.

Every Jack ſlave hath his belly-full of fighting, and I muſt go up and down like a cock that nobody can match. Shakeſp.

2. The name of inſtruments which ſupply the place of a boy, as an inſtrument to pull off boots.

Foot-boys, who had frequently the common name of jack given them, were kept to turn the ſpit, or to pull off their maſters boots; but when inſtruments were invented for both thoſe ſervices, they were both called jacks. Watts.

3. An engine which turns the ſpit.

The excellencies of a good jack are, that the jack frame be forged and filed ſquare; that the wheels be perpendicularly and ſtrongly fixed on the ſquares of the ſplindles; that the teeth be evenly cut, and well ſmoothed; and that the teeth of the whorm-wheel fall evenly into the grove of the worm. Moxon.

The ordinary jacks uſed for roaſting of meat, commonly conſiſt but of three wheels. Wilkins.

Clocks and jacks, though the ſcrews and teeth be never ſo ſmooth, yet, if not oiled, will hardly move. Ray.

A cookmaid, by the fall of a jack weight upon her head, was beaten down. Wiſeman.

Some ſtrain in rhyme; the muſes on their racks
Scream, like the winding of ten thouſand jacks. Pope.

4. A young pike.

No fiſh will thrive in a pond where roach or gudgeons are, except jacks. Mortimer.

5. [Jacque, French.] A coat of mail.

The reſidue were on foot, well furniſhed with jack and ſkull, pike, dagger, bucklers made of board, and ſlicing ſwords, broad, thin, and of an excellent temper. Hayward.

6. A cup of waxed leather.

Dead wine, that ſtinks of the borrachio, ſup
From a foul jack, or greaſy mapple cup. Dryden.

7. A ſmall bowl thrown out for a mark to the bowlers.

'Tis as if one ſhould ſay, that a bowl equally poiſed, and thrown upon a plain bowling-green, will run neceſſarily in a direct motion; but if it be made with a byaſs, that may decline it a little from a ſtraight line, it may acquire a liberty of will, and ſo run ſpontaneouſly to the jack. Bentley.

8. A part of the muſical inſtrument called a virginal.

In a virginal, as ſoon as ever the jack falleth, and toucheth the ſtring, the ſound ceaſeth. Bacon.

9. The male of animals.

A jack aſs, for a ſtallion, was bought for three thouſand two hundred and twenty-nine pounds three ſhillings and four pence. Arbuthnot.

10. A ſupport to ſaw wood on. Ainſworth.

11. The colours or enſign of a ſhip. Ainſworth.

12. A cunning fellow who can turn to any thing.

Jack of all trades, ſhow and ſound;
An inverſe burſe, an exchange under ground. Cleaveland.

JACK Boots. n. ſ. [from jack, a coat of mail.] Boots which ſerve as armour to the legs.

A man on horſeback, in his breeches and jack boots, dreſſed up in a commode and a night-rail. Spectator.

JACK by the Hedge. n. ſ. An herb.

Jack by the Hedge is an herb that grows wild under hedges, is eaten as other ſallads are, and much uſed in broth. Mortim.

JACK Pudding. n. ſ. [jack and pudding.] A zani; a merry Andrew.

Every jack-pudding will be ridiculing palpable weakneſſes which they ought to cover. L'Eſtrange.

A buffoon is called by every nation by the name of the diſh they like beſt: in French jean pottage, and in Engliſh jack pudding. Guardian.

Jack pudding, in his party colour'd jacket,
Toſſes the glove, and jokes at ev'ry packet. Gay.

JACK with a Lantern. An ignis fatuus.

JACKALE'NT. n. ſ. [Jack in Lent, a poor ſtarven fellow.] A ſimple ſheepiſh fellow.

You little jackalent, have you been true to us? Shakeſpeare.
—Ay, I'll be ſworn.

JACKA'L. n. ſ. [chacal, French.] A ſmall animal ſuppoſed to ſtart prey for the lyon.

The Belgians tack upon our rear,
And raking chaſe-guns through our ſterns they ſend;
Cloſe by their fireſhips, like jackals, appear,
Who on their lions for the prey attend. Dryden.

The mighty lyon, before whom ſtood the little jackal, the faithful ſpy of the king of beaſts. Arbuthnot and Pope.

JA'CKANAPES. n. ſ. [jack and ape.]

1. Monkey; an ape.
2. A coxcomb; an impertinent.

Which is he?

—That jackanapes with ſcarfs. Shakeſpeare.

People wondered how ſuch a young upſtart jackanapes ſhould grow ſo pert and ſaucy, and take ſo much upon him. Arbuth.

JACKDA'W. n. ſ. [jack and daw.] A cock daw; a bird taught to imitate the human voice.

To impoſe on a child to get by heart a long ſcroll of phraſes, without any ideas, is a practice fitter for a jackdaw than for any thing that wears the ſhape of man. Watts.

JA'CKET. n. ſ. [jacquet, French.]

1. A ſhort coat; a cloſe waiſtcoat.

In a blue jacket, with a croſs of red. Spenſer.

And hens, and dogs, and hogs are feeding by;
And here a ſailor's jacket hangs to dry. Swift.

Jack pudding, in his party-colour'd jacket,
Toſſes the glove, and jokes at ev'ry packet. Gay.

2. To beat one's JACKET, is to beat the man.

She fell upon the jacket of the parſon, who ſtood gaping at her. L'Eſtrange.

JACULA'TION. n. ſ. [jaculatio, jaculor, Latin.] The act of throwing miſſive weapons.

So hills amid' the air encounter'd hills,
Hurl'd to and fro with jaculation dire. Milton.

JADE. n. ſ. [The etymology of this word is doubtful: Skinner derives it from gaad, a goad, or ſpur.]

1. A horſe of no ſpirit; a hired horſe; a worthleſs nag.

Alas, what wights are theſe that load my heart!
I am as dull as winter-ſtarved ſheep,
Tir'd as a jade in overloaden cart. Sidney.

When they ſhould endure the bloody ſpur,
They fall their creſt, and, like deceitful jades,
Sink in the tryal. Shakeſpeare.

The horſemen ſit like fixed candleſticks,
With torchſtaves in their hand; and their poor jades
Lob down their heads, dropping the head and hips. Shakeſ.

To other regions
France is a ſtable, we that dwell in't jades;
Therefore to th' war. Shakeſpeare.

So have I ſeen with armed heel
A wight beſtride a commonweal,
While ſtill the more he kick'd and ſpurr'd,
The leſs the ſullen jade has ſtirr'd. Hudibras.

The plain nag came upon the trial to prove thoſe to be jades that made ſport with him. L'Eſtrange.

Falſe ſteps but help them to renew their race,
As, after ſtumbling, jades will mend their pace. Pope.

2. A ſorry woman. A word of contempt noting ſometimes age, but generally vice.

Shall theſe, theſe old jades, paſt the flower
Of youth, that you have, paſs you. Chapman.

But ſhe, the cunning'ſt jade alive,
Says, 'tis the ready way to thrive,
By ſharing female bounties. Stepney.

Get in, huſſy: now will I perſonate this young jade, and diſcover the intrigue. Southern.

In di'monds, pearl, and rich brocades,
She ſhines the firſt of batter'd jades,
And flutters in her pride. Swift.

3. A young woman: in irony and ſlight contempt.

You ſee now and then ſome handſome young jades among them: the ſluts have very often white teeth and black eyes. Add.

JADE. n. ſ. A ſpecies of ſtone.

The jade is a ſpecies of the jaſper, and of extreme hardneſs. Its colour is compoſed of a pale blueiſh grey, or aſh-colour, and a pale green, not ſimple and uniform, but intermixed. It appears dull and coarſe on the ſurface, but it takes a very elegant and high poliſh. It is found in the Eaſt Indies, and is much uſed by the Turks for handles of ſabres. It is ſo highly eſteemed by the Indians as to be called the divine ſtone: they wear it externally as a remedy for the gravel, and an amulet to preſerve them from the bite of venomous animals. Hill.

To JADE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To tire; to haraſs; to diſpirit; to weary.

With his banners, and his well-paid ranks,
The ne'er-yet-beaten horſe of Parthia
We've jaded out o' th' field. Shakeſpeare.

It is good in diſcourſe to vary and intermingle ſpeech of the preſent occaſion with arguments; for it is a dull thing to tire and jade any thing too far. Bacon.

If fleet dragon's progeny at laſt
Proves jaded, and in frequent matches caſt,
No favour for the ſtallion we retain,
And no reſpect for the degen'rate ſtrain. Dryden.

The mind once jaded, by an attempt above its power, is very hardly brought to exert its force again. Locke.

There are ſeaſons when the brain is overtired or jaded with ſtudy or thinking; or upon ſome other accounts animal nature may be languid or cloudy, and unfit to aſſiſt the ſpirit in meditation. Watts.

2. To overbear; to cruſh; to degrade; to haraſs, as a horſe that is ridden too hard.

If we live thus tamely,
To be thus jaded by a piece of ſcarlet,
Farewel nobility. Shakeſpeare.

3. To employ in vile offices.

The honourable blood
Muſt not be ſhed by ſuch a jaded groom. Shakeſpeare.

4. To ride; to rule with tyranny.

I do not now fool myſelf, to let imagination jade me; for every reaſon excites to this. Shakeſpeare.

To JADE. v. n. To loſe ſpirit; to ſink.

Many offer at the effects of friendſhip, but they do not laſt: they are promiſing in the beginning, but they fail and jade and tire in the proſecution. South.

JA'DISH. adj. [from jade.]

1. Vitious; bad, as an horſe.

That hors'd us on their backs, to ſhow us
A jadiſh trick at laſt, and throw us. Hudibras.

When once the people get the jadiſh trick
Of throwing off their king, no ruler's ſafe. Southern.

2. Unchaſte; incontinent.

'Tis to no boot to be jealous of a woman; for if the humour takes her to be jadiſh, not all the locks and ſpies in nature can keep her honeſt. L'Eſtrange.

To JAGG. v. a. [gagaw, ſlits or holes, Welſh.] To cut into indentures; to cut into teeth like thoſe of a ſaw.

Some leaves are round, ſome long, ſome ſquare, and many jagged on the ſides. Bacon.

The jagging of pinks and gilliflowers is like the inequality of oak-leaves; but they never have any ſmall plain purls. Bac.

The banks of that ſea muſt be jagged and torn by the impetuous aſſaults, or the ſilent underminings of waves; violent rains muſt waſh down earth from the tops of mountains. Bentley.

An alder-tree is one among the leſſer trees, whoſe younger branches are ſoft, and whoſe leaves are jagged. Watts.

JAGG. n. ſ. [from the verb.] A protuberance or denticulation.

The figure of the leaves is divided into ſo many jaggs or eſcallops, and curiouſly indented round the edges. Ray.

Take off all the ſtaring ſtraws, twigs, and jaggs in the hive, and make them as ſmooth as poſſible. Mortimer.

JA'GGY. adj. [from jagg.] Uneven; denticulated.

His tow'ring creſt was glorious to behold;
His ſhoulders and his ſides were ſcal'd with gold;
Three tongues he brandiſh'd when he charg'd his foes;
His teeth ſtood jaggy in three dreadful rows. Addiſon.

Amid' thoſe angles, infinitely ſtrain'd,
They joyful leave their jaggy ſalts behind. Thomſon.

JA'GGEDNESS. n. ſ. [from jagged.] The ſtate of being denticulated; unevenneſs.

Firſt draw rudely your leaves, making them plain with your coal or lead, before you give them their veins or jaggedneſs. Peacham.

JAIL. n. ſ. [geol, French.] A gaol; a priſon; a place where criminals are confined. See GAOL. It is written either way; but commonly by latter writers jail.

Away with the dotard, to the jail with him. Shakeſp.

A dependant upon him paid ſix pound ready money, which, poor man, he lived to repent in a jail. Clarendon.

He ſigh'd and turn'd his eyes, becauſe he knew
'Twas but a larger jail he had in view. Dryden.

One jail did all their criminals reſtrain,
Which now the walls of Rome can ſcarce contain. Dryden.

JA'ILBIRD. n. ſ. [jail and bird.] One who has been in a jail.

JA'ILER. n. ſ. [from jail.] A gaoler; the keeper of a priſon.

Seeking many means to ſpeak with her, and ever kept from it, as well becauſe ſhe ſhunned it, ſeeing and diſdaining his mind, as becauſe of her jealous jailers. Sidney.

This is a jailer, to bring forth
Some monſtrous malefactor. Shakeſpeare.

His pow'r to hollow caverns is confin'd;
There let him reign, the jailor of the wind;
With hoarſe commands his breathing ſubjects call,
And boaſt and bluſter in his empty hall. Dryden.

Palamon, the pris'ner knight,
Reſtleſs for woe, aroſe before the light;
And with his jailer's leave, deſir'd to breathe
An air more wholeſome than the damp beneath. Dryden.

JAKES. n. ſ. [Of uncertain etymology.] A houſe of office.

I will tread this unbolted villain into mortar, and daub the walls of jakes with him. Shakeſpeare.

Their ſordid avarice rakes
In excrements, and hires the very jakes. Dryden.

Some have fiſhed the very jakes for papers left there by men of wit. Swift.

JA'LAP. n. ſ. [jalap, French; jalapium, low Latin.] Jalap is a firm and ſolid root, of a wrinkled ſurface, and generally cut into ſlices, heavy and hard to break; of a faintiſh ſmell, and of an acrid and nauſeous taſte. It was not known in Europe 'till after the diſcovery of America, and had its name jalapium, or jalapa, from Xalapa, a town in New Spain, in the neighbourhood of which it was diſcovered; though it is now principally brought from the Madeiras. It is an excellent purgative in all caſes where ſerous humours are to be evacuated. Hill.

JAM. n. ſ. [I know not whence derived.] A conſerve of fruits boiled with ſugar and water.

JAMB. n. ſ. [jambe, French.] Any ſupporter on either ſide, as the poſts of a door.

No timber is to be laid within twelve inches of the foreſide of the chimney jambs. Moxon.

JA'MBICK. n. ſ. [iambique, French; iambicus, Latin.] Verſes compoſed of iambick feet, or a ſhort and long ſyllable alternately: uſed originaly in ſatire, therefore taken for ſatire.

In thy felonious heart though venom lies,
It does but touch thy Iriſh pen, and dies:
Thy genius calls thee not to purchaſe fame
In keen iambicks, but mild anagram. Dryden.

To JA'NGLE. v. n. [jangler, French. Skinner.] To altercate; to quarrel; to bicker in words.

Good wits will be jangling; but, gentiles agree,
This civil war of wits were much better us'd
On Navarre and his book-men. Shakeſpeare.

So far am I glad it did ſo ſort,
As this their jangling I eſteem a ſport. Shakeſpeare.

There is no errour which hath not ſome appearance of probability reſembling truth, which when men, who ſtudy to be ſingular, find out, ſtraining reaſon, they then publiſh to the world matter of contention and jangling. Raleigh.

To JA'NGLE. v. a. To make to ſound untuneable.

Now ſee that noble and that ſovereign reaſon,
Like ſweet bells jangled out of tune and harſh. Shakeſpeare.

'Ere Gothick forms were known in Greece,
And in our verſe 'ere monkiſh rhimes
Had jangl'd their fantaſtick chimes. Prior.

JA'NGLER. n. ſ. [from the verb.] A wrangling, chattering, noiſy fellow.

JA'NIZARY. n. ſ. [A Turkiſh word.] One of the guards of the Turkiſh king.

His grand viſier, preſuming to inveſt
The chief imperial city of the Weſt,
With the firſt charge compel'd in haſte to riſe;
The ſtandards loſt, and janizaries ſlain,
Render the hopes he gave his maſter vain. Waller.

JA'NUARY. n. ſ. [Januarius, Latin.] The firſt month of the year, from Janus, to whom it was among the Romans conſecrated.

January is clad in white, the colour of the earth at this time, blowing his nails. This month had the name from Janus, painted with two faces, ſignifying providence. Peacham.

JAPAN. n. ſ. [from Japan in Aſia, where figured work was originally done.] Work varniſhed and raiſed in gold and colours.

The poor girl had broken a large japan glaſs, of great value, with a ſtroke of her bruſh. Swift.

To JAPA'N. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To varniſh, and embelliſh with gold and raiſed figures.

For not the deſk with ſilver nails,
Nor bureau of expence,
Nor ſtandiſh well japan'd, avails
To writing of good ſenſe. Swift.

2. To black ſhoes. A low phraſe.

The god of fire
Among theſe gen'rous preſents joins his part,
And aids with ſoot the new japanning art. Gay.

JAPA'NNER. n. ſ. [from japan.]

1. One ſkilled in japan work.
2. A ſhoeblacker.

The poor have the ſame itch;
They change their weekly barber, weekly news,
Prefer a new japanner to their ſhoes. Pope.

To JAR. v. n. [from eorne, anger, Saxon; or guerre, war, French; or garren, old Teutonick, to clamour.]

1. To ſtrike together with a kind of ſhort rattle.

A hollow groan, a murm'ring wind aroſe;
The rings of iron, that on the doors were hung,
Sent out a jarring ſound, and harſhly rung. Dryden.

My knees tremble with the jarring blow. Gay.

2. To ſtrike or ſound untuneably.

O, you kind gods!
Cure this great breach in his abuſed nature:
Th' untun'd and jarring ſenſes, O, wind up,
Of this child-changed father. Shakeſpeare.

I perceive you delight not in muſick.
—Not a whit, when it jars ſo. Shakeſpeare.

A ſtring may jar in the beſt maſter's hand,
And the moſt ſkilful archer miſs his aim. Roſcommon.

He keeps his temper'd mind, ſerene and pure,
And every paſſion aptly harmoniz'd
Amid' a jarring world. Thomſon.

3. To claſh; to interfere; to act in oppoſition; to be inconſiſtent.

At laſt, though long, our jarring notes agree. Shakeſp.

For orders and degrees
Jar not with liberty, but well conſiſt. Milton.

Venalus concluded his report:
A jarring murmur fill'd the factious court:
As when a torrent rolls with rapid force,
The flood, conſtrain'd within a ſcanty ſpace,
Roars horrible. Dryden.

4. To quarrel; to diſpute.

When thoſe renowned noble peers of Greece,
Through ſtubborn pride, among themſelves did jar,
Forgetful of the famous golden fleece,
Then Orpheus with his harp their ſtrife did bar. Spenſer.

They muſt be ſometimes ignorant of the means conducing to thoſe ends, in which alone they can jar and oppoſe each other. Dryden.

JAR. n. ſ. [from the verb.]

1. A kind of rattling vibration of ſound.

In r, the tongue is held ſtifly at its whole length, by the force of the muſcles; ſo as when the impulſe of breath ſtrikes upon the end of the tongue, where it finds paſſage, it ſhakes and agitates the whole tongue, whereby the ſound is affected with a trembling jar. Holder.

2. Claſh; diſcord; debate:

He maketh war, he maketh peace again,
And yet his peace is but continual jar:
O miſerable men, that to him ſubject are! Spenſer.

Nath'leſs, my brother, ſince we paſſed are
Unto this point, we will appeaſe our jar. Spenſer.

Force would be right; or rather, right and wrong,
Between whoſe endleſs jar juſtice preſides,
Would loſe their names, and ſo would juſtice too. Shakeſp.

3. A ſtate in which a door unfaſtened may ſtrike the poſt; half opened.

The chaffering with diſſenters, and dodging about this or t'other ceremony, is but like opening a few wickets, and leaving them a jar, by which no more than one can get in at a time. Swift.

4. [Giarro, Italian.] An earthen veſſel.

About the upper part of the jar there appeared a good number of bubbles. Boyle.

He mead for cooling drink prepares,
Of virgin honey in the jars. Dryden.

Warriors welter on the ground,
Whilſt empty jars the dire defeat reſound. Garth.

JARDES. n. ſ. [French.] Hard callous tumours in horſes, a little below the bending of the ham on the outſide. This diſtemper in time will make the horſe halt, and grow ſo painful as to cauſe him to pine away, and become light-bellied. It is moſt common to managed horſes, that have been kept too much upon their haunches. Farrier's Dict.

JA'RGON. n. ſ. [jargon, French; gerigonça, Spaniſh.] Unintelligible talk; gabble; gibberiſh.

Nothing is clearer than mathematical demonſtration, yet let one, who is altogether ignorant in mathematicks, hear it, and he will hold it to be plain fuſtian or jargon. Bramhall.

From this laſt toil again what knowledge flows?
Juſt as much, perhaps, as ſhows
That all his predeceſſor's rules
Were empty cant, all jargon of the ſchools. Prior.

During the uſurpation an infuſion of enthuſiaſtick jargon prevailed in every writing. Swift.

JA'RGONELLE. n. ſ. See PEAR, of which it is a ſpecies. Ainſworth.

JA'SHAWK. n. ſ. A young hawk.

JA'SMINE. n. ſ. [jaſmin, Fr. It is often pronounced jeſſamine.] It hath a funnel-ſhaped flower, conſiſting of one leaf, which is cut into ſeveral ſegments at the brim, out of whoſe cup ariſes the pointal, which afterward becomes the fruit or pod, which, for the moſt part, grows double and open lengthwiſe, diſcovering the ſeeds, which are oblong, and have a border round them: theſe are ranged over each other like ſlates on a houſe, and are faſtened to the placenta. Miller.

Thou, like the harmleſs bee, may'ſt freely range;
From jaſmine grove to grove may'ſt wander. Thomſon.

JA'SMINE Perſian. n. ſ. A plant. See LILAC, of which it is a ſpecies.

JA'SPER. n. ſ. [jaſpe, Fr. ioſpis, Lat.] A hard ſtone of a bright beautiful green colour, ſometimes clouded with white, found in maſſes of various ſizes and ſhapes. JA'VEL. n. ſ. [perhaps from the verb.] A wandering fellow.

When as time, flying with wings ſwift,
Expired had the term that thoſe two javels
Should render up a reckoning of their travels. Spenſer.

JA'VELIN. n. ſ. [javeline, French.] A ſpear or half pike, which anciently was uſed either by foot or horſe. It had an iron head pointed.

Others, from the wall, defend
With dart and jav'lin, ſtones and ſulph'rous fire;
On each hand ſlaughter and gigantick deeds. Milton.
She ſhakes her myrtle jav'lin; and, behind,
Her Lycian quiver dances in the wind. Dryden.
Flies the javelin ſwifter to its mark,
Launch'd from the vigour of a Roman arm? Addiſon.

JA'UNDICE. n. ſ. [jauniſſe, jaune, yellow, Fr.] A diſtemper from obſtructions of the glands of the liver, which prevents the gall being duly ſeparated by them from the blood; and ſometimes, eſpecially in hard drinkers, they are ſo indurated as never after to be opened, and ſtraiten the motion of the blood ſo much through that viſcus as to make it divert with a force great enough into the gaſtrick arteries, which go off from the hepatick, to break through them, and drain into the ſtomach; ſo that vomiting of blood, in this diſtemper, is a fatal ſymptom. Quincy.

Why ſhould a man, whoſe blood is warm within,
Sit like his grandſire cut in alabaſter?
Sleep when he wakes, and creep into the jaundice
By being peeviſh? Shakeſpeare.
What grief hath ſet the jaundice on your cheek? Shak.
Thoſe were thy thoughts, and then couldſt judge aright,
'Till int'reſt made a jaundice in thy ſight. Dryden.

The eyes of a man in the jaundice make yellow obſervations on every thing; and the ſoul, tinctured with any paſſion, diffuſes a falſe colour over the real appearances of things. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

JA'UNDICED. adj. [from jaundice.] Infected with the jaundice.

All ſeems infected, that th' infected ſpy,
As all looks yellow to the jaundic'd eye. Pope.

To JAUNT. v. n. [janter, French.] To wander here and there; to buſtle about. It is now always uſed in contempt or levity.

I was not made a horſe,
And yet I bear a burthen like an aſs;
Spur-gall'd and tir'd by jaunting Bolingbroke. Shakeſpeare.

JAUNT. n. ſ. [from the verb.] Ramble; flight; excurſion. It is commonly uſed ludicrouſly, but ſolemnly by Milton.

Our Saviour meek, and with untroubled mind,
After his airy jaunt, though hurry'd ſore,
Hungry and cold, betook him to his reſt. Milton.
He ſends me out on many a jaunt,
Old houſes in the night to haunt. Hudibras.

They parted, and away poſts the cavalier in queſt of his new miſtreſs: his firſt jaunt is to court. L'Eſtrange.

If you are for a merry jaunt, I'll try for once who can foot it fartheſt. Dryden.

Thus much of the ſcheme of my deſign in this part have I run over, and led my reader a long and tedious jaunt, in tracing out theſe metallick and mineral bodies. Woodward.

JA'UNTINESS. n. ſ. [from jaunty, or janty, corrupted from gentil, French. See JANTY.] Airyneſs; flutter; genteelneſs.

A certain ſtiffneſs in my limbs entirely deſtroyed that jauntineſs of air I was once maſter of. Addiſon.

1. The bone of the mouth in which the teeth are fixed.

A generation whoſe teeth are as ſwords, and their jaw teeth as knives, to devour the poor. Prov. xxx. 14.

The jaw bones, hearts, and galls of pikes are very medicinable. Walton.

Piſo, who probably ſpeaks Ariſtole's meaning, ſaith that the crocodile doth not only move his upper jaw, but that his nether jaw is immoveable. Grew.

More formidable hydra ſtands within,
Whoſe jaws with iron teeth ſeverely grin. Dryden.

2. The mouth.

My tongue cleaveth to my jaws, and thou haſt brought me into the duſt of death. Pſ. xxii. 15.

My bended hook ſhall pierce their ſlimy jaws. Shakeſpeare.
A ſmeary foam works o'er my grinding jaws,
And utmoſt anguiſh ſhakes my lab'ring frame. Rowe.

JAY. n. ſ. [named from his cry. Skinner.] A bird.

Two ſharp winged ſheers,
Deck'd with diverſe plumes, like painted jays,
Were fixed at his back, to cut his airy ways. Spenſer.
We'll uſe this unwholſome humidity, this groſs watry pumpion—we'll teach him to know turtles from jays. Shakeſpeare.

What, is the jay more precious than the lark,
Becauſe his feathers are more beautiful? Shakeſpeare.
I am highly delighted to ſee the jay or the thruſh hopping about my walks. Spectator.

Admires the jay, the inſects gilded wings,
Or hears the hawk, when Philomela ſings. Pope.

JA'ZEL. n. ſ. A precious ſtone of an azure or blue colour. Dict.

ICE. n. ſ. [ıſ, Saxon; eyſe, Dutch.]

1. Water or other liquor made ſolid by cold.

You are no ſurer, no,
Than is the coal of fire upon the ice,
Or hailſtone in the ſun.
Thou art all ice, thy kindneſs freezes. Shakeſpeare.
If I ſhould aſk whether ice and water were two diſtinct ſpecies of things, I doubt not but I ſhould be anſwered in the affirmative. Locke.

2. Concreted ſugar.

3. To break the ICE. To make the firſt opening to any attempt.

If you break the ice, and do this feat,
Atchieve the elder, ſet the younger free
For our acceſs, whoſe hap ſhall be to have her,
Will not ſo graceleſs be to be ingrate. Shakeſpeare.
Thus have I broken the ice to invention, for the more repreſentation of floods and rivers neceſſary for our painters and poets. Peacham.

After he'd a while look'd wiſe,
At laſt broke ſilence and the ice. Hudibras.

There majus is identical with magis. Hale.

Thoſe ridiculous identical propoſitions, that faith is faith, and rule is a rule, are firſt principles in this controverſy of the rule of faith, without which nothing can be ſolidly concluded either about rule or faith. Tillotſon.

If this pre-exiſtent eternity is not compatible with a ſucceſſive duration, as we clearly and diſtinctly perceive that it is not, then it remains, that ſome being, though infinitely above our finite comprehenſions, muſt have had an identical, invariable continuance from all eternity, which being is no other than God. Bentley.

IDE'NTITY. n. f. [identité, French; identitas, ſchool Latin.] Sameneſs; not diverſity.

There is a fallacy of equivocation from a ſociety in name, inferring an identity in nature: by this fallacy was he deceived that drank aqua-fortis for ſtrong water. Brown.

Certainly thoſe actions muſt needs be regular, where there is an identity between the rule and the faculty. South.

Conſidering any thing as exiſting, at any determined time and place, we compare it with itſelf exiſting at another time, and thereon form the ideas of identity and diverſity. Locke.

It cuts off the ſenſe at the end of every firſt line, which muſt always rhime to the next following, and conſequently produces too frequent an identity in ſound, and brings every couplet to the point of an epigram. Prior.

IDES. n. f. [ides, Fr. idus, Lat.] A term anciently uſed among the Romans, and ſtill retained in the Romiſh kalendar. It is the 13th day of each month, except in the months of March, May, July and October, in which it is the 15th day, becauſe in theſe four months it was ſix days before the nones, and in the others four days. Trevoux.

A ſoothſayer bids you beware the ides of March. Shakeſp.

IDIO'CRASY. n. f. [idiocraſe, French; ἴδιος and κρᾶσις.] Peculiarity of conſtitution.

IDIOCRA'TICAL. adj. [from idiocraſy.] Peculiar in conſtitution.

I'DIOCY. n. f. [ἰδιωτία.] Want of underſtanding.

I ſtand not upon their idiocy in thinking that horſes did eat their bits. Bacon.

I'DIOM. n. f. [idiome, French; ἴδιωμα.] A mode of ſpeaking peculiar to a language or dialect; the particular caſt of a tongue; a phraſe; phraſeology.

He did romanize our tongue, leaving the words tranſlated as much Latin as he found them; wherein he followed their language, but did not comply with the idiom of ours. Dryden.

Some that with care true eloquence ſhall teach,
And to juſt idioms fix our doubtful ſpeech. Prior.

IDIOMA'TICAL. } adj. [from idiom.] Peculiar to a tongue;
IDIOM'ATICK. } phraſeological.

Since phraſes uſed in converſation contract meanneſs by paſſing through the mouths of the vulgar, a poet ſhould guard himſelf againſt idiomatick ways of ſpeaking. Spectator.

IDIO'PATHY. n. f. [idiopathie, Fr. ἴδιος and πάθος.] A primary diſeaſe that neither depends on nor proceeds from another. Qui.

IDIOSY'NCRASY. n. f. [idioſyncraſe, Fr. ἴδιος, σύν, and κρᾶσις.] A peculiar temper or diſpoſition not common to another. Qui.

Whether quails, from any idioſyncraſy or peculiarity of conſtitution, do innocuouſly feed upon helleboræ, or rather ſometimes but medicinally uſe the ſame. Brown's Vulg. Errours.

The underſtanding alſo hath its idioſyncraſies, as well as other faculties. Glanville.

I'DIOT. n. f. [idiote, Fr. idiota, Latin; ἰδιώτης.] A fool; a natural; a changeling; one without the powers of reaſon.

Life is a tale,
Told by an idiot, full of ſound and fury,
Signifying nothing. Shakeſpeare.

What elſe doth he herein, than by a kind of circumlocution tell his humble ſuppliants that he holds them idiots, or baſe wretches, not able to get relief? Raleigh.

By idle boys and idiots vilify'd,
Who me and my calamities deride: Sandys.

Many idiots will believe that they ſee what they only hear. Dennis.

I'DIOTISM. n. f. [idiotiſme, French; ἰδιωτισμὸς.]

1. Peculiarity of expreſſion; mode of expreſſion peculiar to a language.

Scholars ſometimes in common ſpeech, or writing, in their native language, give terminations and idiotiſms ſuitable to their native language unto words newly invented. Hale.

2. Folly; natural imbecillity of mind.

I'DLE. adj. [ydel, Saxon.]

1. Lazy; averſe from labour.

For ſhame, ſo much to do, and yet idle. Bull.

2. Not buſy; at leiſure.

For often have you writ to her; and ſhe in modeſty,
Or elſe for want of idle time, could not again reply. Shak.

3. Unactive; not employed.

No war or battle's ſound
Was heard the world around,
The idle ſpear and ſhield were high up hung. Milton.

Children generally hate to be idle; all the care then is, that their buſy humour ſhould be conſtantly employed in ſomething of uſe to them. Locke.

Suppoſing, among a multitude embarked in the ſame veſſel, there are ſeveral that, in the fury of a tempeſt, will rather periſh than work for their preſervation; would it not be madneſs in the reſt to ſtand idle, and rather chuſe to ſink than do more than comes to their ſhare? Addiſon.

4. Uſeleſs; vain; ineffectual.

They aſtoniſh'd, all reſiſtance loſt,
All courage; down their idle weapons dropp'd. Milton.

And threatning France, plac'd like a painted Jove,
Held idle thunder in his lifted hand. Dryden.

Where was then
The power that guards the ſacred lives of kings?
Why ſlept the lightning and the thunderbolts,
Or bent their idle rage on fields and trees,
When vengeance call'd 'em here? Dryden.

5. Worthleſs; barren; not productive of good.

Suffice it then, thou money god, quoth he,
That all thine idle offers I refuſe;
All that I need I have: what needeth me
To covet more than I have cauſe to uſe? Spenſer.

Of antres vaſt, and deſarts idle,
It was my bent to ſpeak. Shakeſpeare.

The murmuring ſurge,
That on th' unnumber'd idle pebbles chafes,
Cannot be heard ſo high. Shakeſpeare.

He was met even now,
Crown'd with rank fumiter and furrow-weeds,
Darnel, and all the idle weeds that grow
In our sustaining corn. Shakespeare.

6. Trifling; of no importance: as, an idle story.
This answer is both idle in regard of us, and also repugnant to themselves. Hooker.
They are not, in our estimation, idle reproofs, when the authors of needless innovations are opposed with such negatives, as that of Leo: how are these new devices brought in, which our fathers never knew? Hooker.
His friend smil'd scornful, and, with proud contempt,
Rejects as idle what his fellow dreamt. Dryden.
An idle reason lessens the weight of the good ones you gave before. Swift.
How ill he wishes to recall the precious hours he has spent in trifles, and loitered away in idle unprofitable diversions. Rogers's Sermons.

To IDLE. v. n. [from the adjective.] To lose time in laziness and inactivity.
Yet free from this poetick madness,
Next page he says, in sober sadness,
That she and all her fellow-gods
Sit idling in their high abodes. Prior.

IDLEHE'ADED. adj. [idle and head.] Foolish; unreasonable.
These idleheaded seekers resorted thither. Carew.
Upon this loss she fell idleheaded, and to this very day stands near the place still. L'Estrange.

I'DLENESS. n. s. [from idle.]
1. Laziness; sloth; sluggishness; aversion from labour.
Nor is excess the only thing by which sin mauls and breaks men in their health, and the comfortable enjoyment of themselves thereby; but many are also brought to a very ill and languishing habit of body by mere idleness, and idleness is both itself a great sin, and the cause of many more. South.
2. Absence of employment.
All which yet could not make us accuse her, though it made us pine away for spight, to lose any of our time in so troublesome an idleness. Sidney.
To the English court assemble now,
From ev'ry region, apes of idleness. Shakespeare.
He fearing idleness, the nurse of ill,
In sculpture exercis'd his happy skill. Dryden.
Nature being liberal to all without labour, necessity imposing no industry or travel, idleness bringeth forth no other fruits than vain thoughts and licentious pleasures. Raleigh.
3. Omission of business.
Ten thousand harms, more than the ills I know,
My idleness doth hatch. Shakespeare.
4. Unimportance; trivialness.
5. Inefficacy; uselessness.
6. Barrenness; worthlessness.
7. Unreasonableness; want of judgment; foolishness; madness.
There is no heat of affection but is joined with some idleness of brain. Bacon.

IDLER. n. s. [from idle.] A lazy person; a sluggard.
Many of these poor fishermen and idlers, that are commonly presented to his majesty's ships, are so ignorant in sea-service as that they know not the name of a rope. Raleigh.
Thou sluggish idler, dilatory slave. Irene.

I'DLY. adv. [from idle.]
1. Lazily; without employment.
I will slay myself,
For living idly here in pomp and ease. Shakespeare.
2. Foolishly; in a trifling manner.
And modern Asgil, whose capricious thought
Is yet with stores of wilder notions fraught,
Too soon convinc'd, shall yield that fleeting breath,
Which play'd so idly with the darts of death. Prior.
3. Carelessly; without attention.
This from rumour's tongue
I idly heard; if true or false, I know not. Shakespeare.
But shall we take the muse abroad,
To drop her idly on the road?
And leave our subject in the middle,
As Butler did his bear and fiddle? Prior.
4. Ineffectually; vainly.
Let this and other allegations, suitable unto it, cease to bark any longer idly against the truth, the course and passage whereof it is not in them to hinder. Hooker.

IDOL. n. s. [idole, French; εἴδωλον; idolum, Latin.]
1. An image worshipped as God.
They did sacrifice upon the idol altar, which was upon the altar of God. 1 Mac. i. 59.
A nation from one faithful man to spring,
Him on this side Euphrates yet residing,
Bred up in idol worship. Milton.
The apostle is there arguing against the gnosticks who joined in the idol feasts, and whom he therefore accuses of participating of the idol god. Atterbury.
2. A counterfeit.
Woe to the idol shepherd that leaveth the flock. Zech. ii 17.
3. An image.
Never did art so well with nature strive,
Nor ever idol seem'd so much alive;
So like the man, so golden to the sight;
So base within, so counterfeit and light. Dryden.
4. A representation.
Men beholding so great excellence,
And rare perfection in mortality,
Do her adore with sacred reverence,
As th' idol of her maker's great magnificence. Spenser.
5. One loved or honoured to adoration.
He's honoured and lov'd by all;
The soldiers god, and people's idol. Denham.

IDO'LATER. n. s. [idolatre, French; idolatra, Latin.] One who pays divine honours to images; one who worships for God that which is not God.
The state of idolaters is two ways miserable: first, in that which they worship they find no succour; and secondly, at his hands, whom they ought to serve, there is no other thing to be looked for but the effects of most just displeasure, the withdrawing of grace, dereliction in this world, and in the world to come confusion. Hooker.
An astrologer may be no Christian; he may be an idolater or a pagan; but I would hardly think astrology to be compatible with rank atheism. Bentley.

To IDO'LATRIZE. v. a. [from idolater.] To worship idols. Ainsw.

IDO'LATROUS. adj. [from idolater.] Tending to idolatry; comprising idolatry, or the worship of false gods.
Neither may the pictures of our Saviour, the apostles, and martyrs of the church, be drawn to an idolatrous use, or be set up in churches to be worshipped. Peacham.

IDO'LATROUSLY. adv. [from idolatrous.] In an idolatrous manner.
Not therefore whatsoever idolaters have either thought or done; but let whatsoever they have either thought or done idolatrously, be so far forth abhorred. Hooker.

IDO'LATRY. n. s. [idolatrie, Fr. idololatria, Lat.] The worship of images; the worship of any thing as God which is not God.
Thou shalt be worshipp'd, kiss'd, lov'd and ador'd;
And, were there sense in his idolatry,
My substance should be statued in thy stead. Shakespeare.
Idolatry is not only an accounting or worshipping that for God which is not God, but it is also a worshipping the true God in a way wholly unsuitable to his nature; and particularly by the mediation of images and corporeal resemblances. South's Sermons.
The kings were distinguished by judgments or blessings, according as they promoted idolatry, or the worship of the true God. Atterbury.

I'DOLIST. n. s. [from idol.] A worshipper of images. A poetical word.
I to God have brought
Dishonour, obloquy, and op'd the mouths
Of idolists and atheists. Milton.

To I'DOLIZE. v. a. [from idol.] To love or reverence to adoration.
Those who are generous, humble, just and wise,
Who not their gold, nor themselves idolize. Denham.
Parties, with the greatest violation of Christian union, denominate themselves, not from the grand author and finisher of our faith, but from the first broacher of their idolized opinions. Duty of Piety.

IDO'NEUS. adj. [idoneus, Latin.] Fit; proper; convenient; adequate.
You entangle, and so fix their saline part, by making them corrode some idoneous body. Boyle.
An ecclesiastical benefice is sometimes void de jure & facto, and then it ought to be conferred on an idoneous person. Ayliffe.

I'DYL. n. s. [εἰδύλλιον; idyllium, Latin.] A small short poem.

I. E. for id est, or that is.
That which raises the natural interest of money, is the same that raises the rent of land, i. e. its aptness to bring in yearly, to him that manages it, a greater overplus of income above his rent, as a reward to his labour. Locke.

JE'ALOUS. adj. [jaloux, French.]
1. Suspicious in love.
To both these sisters have I sworn my love:
Each jealous of the other, as the sting
Are of the adder. Shakespeare.
Wear your eye thus; not jealous, nor secure:
I would not have your free and noble nature,
Out of self-bounty, be abus'd: look to't. Shakespeare.
Mistress Ford, the honest woman, the modest wife, the virtuous creature, that hath the jealous fool to her husband. Shakespeare.
A jealous empress lies within your arms,
Too haughty to endure neglected charms. Dryden.
2. Emulous; full of competition.
I could not, without extreme reluctance, resign the theme of your beauty to another hand: give me leave to acquaint the world that I am jealous of this subject. Dryden.
3. Zealously

3. Zealouſly cautious againſt diſhonour.

I have been very jealous for the Lord God of hoſts. 1 Kings.

4. Suſpiciouſly vigilant.

I am jealous over you with godly jealouſy. 2 Cor.

His apprehenſions, as his jea ous nature had much of ſagacity in it, or his reſtleſs and mutinous humour, tranſported him. Clarendon.

5. Suſpiciouſly careful.

Although he were a prince in military virtue approved, and jealous of the honour of the Engliſh nation; yet his cruelties and parricides weighed down his virtues. Bacon.

They jealous of their ſecrets, fiercely oppos'd
My journey ſtrange, with clamorous uproar
Proteſting fate ſupreme. Milton.

How nicely jealous is every one of us of his own repute, and yet how maliciouſly prodigal of other mens. Dec. of Piety.

6. Suſpiciouſly fearful.

'Tis doing wrong creates ſuch doubts as theſe;
Renders us jealous, and deſtroys our peace. Waller.

While the people are ſo jealous of the clergy's ambition, I do not ſee any other method left for them to reform the world, than by uſing all honeſt arts to make themſelves acceptable to the laicty. Swift.

JE'ALOUSLY. adv. [from jealous.] Suſpiciouſly; emulouſly; with ſuſpicious fear, vigilance, or caution.

JE'ALOUSNESS. n. ſ. [from jealous.] The ſtate of being jealous; rivalry; ſuſpicion; ſuſpicious vigilance.

Nor is it hard for thee to preſerve me amidſt the unjuſt hatred and jealouſneſs of too many, which thou haſt ſuffered to prevail upon me. King Charles.

JE'ALOUSY. n. ſ. [jalouſie, French; from jealous.]

1. Suſpicion in love.

But gnawing jealouſy, out of their ſight,
Sitting alone, his bitter lips did bite. Spenſer.

The ſweet woman leads an ill life with him; he's a very jealouſy man. Shakeſpeare.

How all the other paſſions fleet to air,
As doubtful thoughts, and raſh embrac'd deſpair;
And ſhudd'ring fear, and green-ey'd jealouſy!
O love, be moderate; allay thy extaſy. Shakeſpeare.

Why did you ſuffer Jachimo,
Slight thing of Italy,
To taint his noble heart and brain
With needleſs jealouſy? Shakeſpeare.

Small jealouſies, 'tis true, inflame deſire;
Too great, not fan, but quite blow out the fire. Dryden.

2. Suſpicious fear.

The obſtinacy in Eſſex, in refuſing to treat with the king, proceeded only from his jealouſy, that when the king had got him into his hands, he would take revenge upon him. Clar.

3. Suſpicious caution, vigilance, or rivalry.

To JEER. v. n. [Of uncertain etymology.] To ſcoff; to flout; to make mock.

The merry world did on a day,
With his trainbands and mates agree
To meet together where I lay,
And all in ſport to jeer at me. Herbert.

Abſtain from diſſolute laughter, petulant uncomely jeſts, loud talking, and jeering, which are called indecencies and incivilities. Taylor.

To JEER. v. a. To treat with ſcoffs.

My children abroad are driven to diſavow me, for fear of being jeered. Howel.

JEER. n. ſ. [from the verb.] Scoff; taunt; biting jeſt; flout; jibe; mock.

Midas, expos'd to all their jeers,
Had loſt his art, and kept his ears. Swift.

They tipt the forehead in a jeer,
As who ſhould ſay—ſhe wants it here;
She may be handſome, young and rich;
But none will burn her for a witch. Swift.

JE'ERER. n. ſ. [from jeer.] A ſcoffer; a ſcorner; a mocker.

JE'ERINGLY. adv. [from jeering.] Scornfully; contemptuouſly; in mock; in ſcoff.

JE'GGET. n. ſ. A kind of ſauſage. Ainſworth.

JEHO'VAH. n. ſ. [יהוה] The proper name of God in the Hebrew language.

JEJU'NE. adj. [jejunus, Latin.]

1. Wanting; empty; vacant.

Gold is the only ſubſtance which hath nothing in it volatile, and yet melteth without much difficulty: the melting ſheweth that it is not jejune or ſcarce in ſpirit. Bacon.

2. Hungry; not ſaturated.

In groſs and turbid ſtreams there might be contained nutriment, and not jejune or limpid water. Brown.

3. Dry; unaffecting.

You may look upon an enquiry made up of meer narratives, as ſomewhat jejune. Boyle.

JEJU'NENESS. n. ſ. [from jejune.]

1. Penury; poverty.

There are three cauſes of fixation: the even ſpreading both parts, and the jejuneneſs or extreme comminution of ſpirits. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

2. Dryneſs; want of matter that can engage the attention.

JE'LLIED. adj. [See GELLY.] Glutinous; brought to a ſtate of viſcoſity.

The kiſs that ſips
The jellied philtre of her lips. Cleaveland.

JE'NNET. n. ſ. [See GENNET.] A Spaniſh horſe.

The Spaniſh king preſents a jennet,
To ſhew his love. Prior.

To JE'OPARD. v. a. [See JEOPARDY.] To hazard; to put in danger. Obſolete.

He had been accuſed of Judaiſm, and did boldly jeopard his body and life for the religion of the Jews. 2 Maccabees.

JE'OPARDOUS. adj. [from jeopardy.] Hazardous; dangerous.

JE'OPARDY. n. ſ. [This word is ſuppoſed to be derived from j'ai perdu, or jeu perdu. Skinner and Junius.] Hazard; danger; peril. A word not now in uſe.

And would ye not poor fellowſhip expel,
Myſelf would offer you t' accompany,
In this adventure's chanceful jeopardy. Spenſer.

Thy rage ſhall burn thee up, and thou ſhalt turn
To aſhes ere our blood ſhall quench that fire:
Look to thyſelf, thou art in jeopardy. Shakeſpeare.

This colour will be reprehended or encountered, by imputing to all excellencies in compoſitions a kind of poverty, or at leaſt a caſualty or jeopardy. Bacon.

To JERK. v. a. [ʒeneccan, Saxon.] To ſtrike with a quick ſmart blow; to laſh. It is ſometimes written jerk.

I lack iniquity
Sometimes to do me ſervice: nine or ten times
I thought to've jerk'd him here under the ribs. Shakeſp.

Baſtings heavy, dry, obtuſe,
Only dulneſs can produce;
While a little gentle jerking
Sets the ſpirits all a working. Swift.

To JERK. v. n. To ſtrike up; to accoſt eagerly. This ſeems to be the meaning in this place, but is mere cant.

Nor bluſh, ſhould he ſome grave acquaintance meet;
But, proud of being known, will jerk and greet. Dryden.

JERK. n. ſ. [from the verb.]

1. A ſmart quick laſh.

Contemn the ſilly taunts of fleering buffoonry; and the jerks of that wit, that is but a kind of confident folly. Glanv.

Wit is not the jerk or ſting of an epigram, nor the ſeeming contradiction of a poor antitheſis; neither is it ſo much the morality of a grave ſentence, affected by Lucan, but more ſparingly uſed by Virgil. Dryden.

2. A ſudden ſpring; a quick jolt that ſhocks or ſtarts.

Well run Tawney, the abbot's churl;
His jade gave him a jerk,
As he would have his rider hurl
His hood after the kirk. Ben. Johnſon.

Lobſters uſe their tails as fins, wherewith they commonly ſwim backwards by jerks or ſprings, reaching ten yards at once. Grew.

JE'RKEN. n. ſ. [cyrtelkin, Saxon.] A jacket; a ſhort coat; a cloſe waiſtcoat.

A man may wear it on both ſides like a leathern jerkin. Shak.

Miſtreſs Line, is not this my jerkin? Now is the jerkin under the line: now, jerkin, you are like to loſe your hair, and prove a bald jerkin. Shakeſpeare.

Unleſs we ſhould expect that nature ſhould make jerkins and ſtockings grow out of the ground, what could ſhe do better than afford us ſo fit materials for clothing as the wool of the ſheep? More.

Imagine an embaſſador preſenting himſelf in a poor frize jerkin, and tattered cloaths, certainly he would have but ſmall audience. South.

Then ſtrip thee of thy carnal jerkin,
And give thy outward fellow a ſerkin. Hudibras.

I walked into the ſea, in my leathern jerkin, about an hour before high water. Swift.

JE'RKIN. n. ſ. A kind of hawk. Ainſworth. This ſhould be written gyrkin.

JESS. n. ſ. [geſte, French; getto, Italian.] Short ſtraps of leather tied about the legs of a hawk, with which ſhe is held on the fiſt. Hanmer.

If I prove her haggard,
Though that my jeſſes were her dear heartſtrings,
I'd whiſtle her off, and let her down the wind
To prey at fortune. Shakeſpeare.

JE'SSAMINE. n. ſ. [See JASMINE.] A fragrant flower.

Her goodly boſom, like a ſtrawberry bed;
Her neck, like to a bunch of cullambines;
Her breaſt like lillies, ere their leaves be ſhed;
Her nipples, like young bloſſom'd jeſſamines. Spenſer.

JERU'SALEM Artichokes. n. ſ. See SUNFLOWER, of which they are a ſpecies.

Jeruſalem artichokes are increaſed by ſmall off-ſets, and by quartering the roots. Mortimer.

To JEST. v. n. [geſticulor, Latin.] To divert or make merry by words or actions.

Jeſt not with a rude man, leſt thy anceſtors be diſgraced. Eccluſ.

Fear you the boar, and go ſo unprovided?
—You may jeſt on; but
I do not like theſe ſeveral councils. Shakeſpeare.

JEST. n. ſ. [from the verb.]

1. Any thing ludicrous, or meant only to raiſe laughter.

But is this true, or is it elſe your pleaſure,
Like pleaſant travellers to break a jeſt
Upon the company you overtake? Shakeſpeare.

As for jeſt, there be certain things which ought to be privileged from it; namely, religion, matters of ſtate, and great perſons. Bacon.

No man ought to have the leſs reverence for the principles of religion, or for the holy Scriptures, becauſe idle and profane wits can break jeſts upon them. Tillotſon.

He had turn'd all tragedy to jeſt. Prior.

2. The object of jeſts; laughing-ſtock.

If I ſuſpect without cauſe, why then make ſport at me; then let me be your jeſt, I deſerve it. Shakeſpeare.

3. Manner of doing or ſpeaking feigned, not real; ludicrous, not ſerious; game, not earneſt.

That high All-ſeer, which I dallied with,
Hath turn'd my feigned prayer on my head,
And giv'n in earneſt what I begg'd in jeſt. Shakeſpeare.

When his play-fellows choſe him their king, he ſpoke and did thoſe things in jeſt, which would have become a king in earneſt. Grew.

JE'STER. n. ſ. [from jeſt.]

1. One given to merriment and pranks.

The ſkipping king, he rambled up and down
With ſhallow jeſters, and raſh bavin wits;
Soon kindled, and ſoon burnt. Shakeſpeare.

2. One given to ſarcaſm.

Now, as a jeſter, I accoſt you,
Which never yet one friend has loſt you. Swift.

3. Buffoon; jackpudding.

Another ſort of like looſe fellows do paſs up and down, amongſt gentlemen, by the name of jeſters; but are, indeed, notable rogues, and partakers not only of many ſtealths, but alſo privy to many traitorous practiſes. Spenſer.

JET. n. ſ. [ȝagat, Saxon; get, Dutch; gagates, Latin.]

1. Jet is a very beautiful foſſil, of a firm and very even ſtructure, and of a ſmooth ſurface; found in maſſes, ſeldom of a great ſize, lodged in clay. It is of a fine deep black colour, having a grain reſembling that of wood. The ancients recommend jet in medicine; but it is now uſed only in toys. It is confounded with cannal-coal, which has no grain, and is extremely hard; and the jet is but moderately ſo. Hill.

Black, forſooth; coal-black, as jet. Shakeſpeare.

There is more difference between thy fleſh and hers, than between jet and ivory. Shakeſpeare.

The bottom clear,
Now laid with many a fet
Of ſeed-pearl, ere ſhe bath'd her there,
Was known as black as jet. Drayton.

One of us in glaſs is ſet,
One of us you'll find in jet. Swift.

Under flowing jet,
Of ſunny ringlets, or of circling brown,
The neck ſlight ſhaded. Thomſon.

2. [Jet, French.] A ſpout or ſhoot of water.

Prodigious 'tis, that one attractive ray
Should this way bend, the next an adverſe way!
For ſhould th' unſeen magnetick jets deſcend
All the ſame way, they could not gain their end.
Blackmore's Creation.

Thus the ſmall jet, which haſty hands unlock,
Spurts in the gard'ner's eyes who turns the cock. Pope.

Did you never taste delicious drink out of an ill looked vessel? L'Estrange.

The match had been so ill made for Plexirtus, that his ill led life would have tumbled to destruction, had there not come fifty to his defence. Sidney.

The works are weak, the garrison but thin,
Dispirited with frequent overthrows,
Already wavering on their ill mann'd walls. Dryden.
He will not hear me out!
Was ever criminal forbid to plead?
Curb their ill manner'd zeal. Dryden.
These are the product
Of those ill mated marriages thou saw'st,
Where good with bad were match'd. Milton.

It is impossible for the most ill minded, avaritious, or cunning clergyman to do the least injustice to the meanest cottager, in any bargain for tythes. Swift.

Soon as th' ill omen'd rumour reach'd his ear,
Who can describe th' amazement in his face! Dryden.

The eternal law of things must not be altered, to comply with his ill ordered choice. Locke.

When you expose the scene,
Down the ill organ'd engines fall,
Off fly the vizards. Swift.
For Phthia fix'd is my return;
Better at home my ill paid pains to mourn,
Than from an equal here sustain the publick scorn. Dryden.
There motly images her fancy strike,
Figures ill pair'd, and similies unlike. Pope.
Sparta has not to boast of such a woman;
Nor Troy to thank her, for her ill plac'd love. Dryden.

I shall direct you better, a task for which I take myself not to be ill qualified, because I have had more opportunities than many others to observe what sources the follies of women are derived from. Swift.

Actions are pleasing or displeasing, either in themselves, or considered as a means to a greater and more desirable end: the eating of a well seasoned dish, suited to a man's palate, may move the mind, by the delight itself that accompanies the eating, without reference to any other end; to which the consideration of the pleasure there is in health and strength may add a new gust, able to make us swallow an ill relished potion. Locke.

Blushes, ill restrain'd, betray
Her thoughts inventive on the bridal day;
The conscious sire the dawning blush survey'd,
And smiling thus bespoke the blooming maid. Pope.
Behold the fruit of ill rewarded pain:
As many months as I sustain'd her hate,
So many years is she condemn'd by fate. Dryden.
The god inform'd
This ill shap'd body with a daring soul.
Dryden and Lee's Oepidus.

There was plenty enough, but the dishes were ill sorted: whole pyramids of sweetmeats for boys and women; but little of solid meat for men. Dryden.

It does not belong to the priest's office to impose this name in baptism: he may refuse to pronounce the same, if the parents give them ludicrous, filthy, or ill sounding names. Ayliffe.

Ill spirited Wor'ster, did we not tend grace,
Pardon and terms of love to all of you? Shakespeare.
From thy foolish heart, vain maid, remove
An useless sorrow, and an ill starr'd love. Prior.
Ah, why th' ill suiting pastime must I try?
To gloomy care my thoughts alone are free:
Ill the gay sports with troubled hearts agree. Pope.

Holding of ill tasted things in the mouth will make a small salivation. Grew.

The maid, with downcast eyes, and mute with grief,
For death unfinish'd, and ill tim'd relief,
Stood sullen to her suit. Dryden.

How should opinions, thus settled, be given up, if there be any suspicion of interest or design, as there never fails to be, where men find themselves ill treated? Locke.

That boldness and spirit which lads get amongst their playfellows at school, has ordinarily a mixture of rudeness and ill turned confidence; so that these misbecoming and disingenuous ways of shifting in the world must be unlearned. Locke.

IL, before words beginning with l, stand for in.

Imaginary ills and fancied tortures? Addiſon.

IMA'GINATION. n. ſ. [imaginatio, Latin; imagination, French; from imagine.]
1. Fancy; the power of forming ideal pictures; the power of repreſenting things abſent to one's ſelf or others.

Imagination I underſtand to be the repreſentation of an individual thought. Imagination is of three kinds: joined with belief of that which is to come; joined with memory of that which is paſt; and of things preſent, or as if they were preſent: for I comprehend in this imagination feigned and at pleaſure, as if one ſhould imagine ſuch a man to be in the veſtments of a pope, or to have wings. Bacon.
Our ſimple apprehenſion of corporal objects, if preſent, is ſenſe; if abſent, imagination: when we would perceive a material object, our fancies preſent us with its idea. Glanville.
O whither ſhall I run, or which way fly
The ſight of this ſo horrid ſpectacle,
Which erſt my eyes beheld, and yet behold!
For dire imagination ſtill purſues me. Milton.
His imaginations were often as juſt as they were bold and ſtrong. Dennis.
Where beams of warm imagination play,
The memory's ſoft figures melt away. Pope.

2. Conception; image in the mind; idea.
Sometimes deſpair darkens all her imaginations; ſometimes the active paſſion of love cheers and clears her invention. Sid.
Princes have but their titles for their glories,
An outward honour for an inward toil;
And, for unfelt imaginations,
They often feel a world of reſtleſs cares. Shakeſpeare.
Better I were diſtract,
So ſhould my thoughts be ſever'd from my griefs;
And woes, by wrong imaginations, loſe
The knowledge of themſelves. Shakeſpeare.
We are apt to think that ſpace, in itſelf, is actually boundleſs; to which imagination, the idea of ſpace of itſelf leads us. Locke.

3. Contrivance; ſcheme.
Thou haſt ſeen all their vengeance, and all their imaginations againſt me. Lam. iii. 60.

IMA'GINATIVE. adj. [imaginatif, Fr. from imagine.] Fantaſtick; full of imagination.
Witches are imaginative, and believe oft times they do that which they do not. Bacon.
Lay fetters and reſtraints upon the imaginative and fantaſtick part, becauſe our fancy is uſually pleaſed with the entertainment of ſhadows and gauds. Taylor.

To IMA'GINE. v. a. [imaginer, French; imaginor, Latin.]
1. To fancy; to paint in the mind.
Look what notes and garments he doth give thee,
Bring them, I pray thee, with imagin'd ſpeed. Shakeſpeare.
Preſent feats
Are leſs than horrible imaginings. Shakeſpeare.
What are our ideas of eternity and immenſity but the repeated additions of certain ideas of imagined parts of duration and expanſion, with the infinity of number, in which we can come to no end of addition? Locke.

2. To ſcheme; to contrive.
They intended evil againſt thee, they imagined a miſchievous device. Pſalms.

IMA'GINER. n. ſ. [from imagine.] One who forms ideas.
The juggler took upon him to know that ſuch an one ſhould point in ſuch a place of a garter that was held up; and ſtill he did it, by firſt telling the imaginer, and after bidding the actor think. Bacon.

IMBE'CILE. adj. [imbecilis, Latin; imbecille, French.] Weak; feeble; wanting ſtrength of either mind or body.

To IMBE'CILE. v. a. [from the adjective. This word is corruptly written embezzle.] To weaken a ſtock or fortune by clandeſtine expences or unjuſt appropriations.
Princes muſt in a ſpecial manner be guardians of pupils and widows, not ſuffering their perſons to be oppreſſed, or their ſtates imbeciled. Taylor.

IMBECI'LITY. n. ſ. [imbecillité, French.] Weakneſs; feebleneſs of mind or body.

Conversation with foreigners enlarges our minds, and sets them free from many prejudices we are ready to imbibe concerning them. Watts.

3. To drench; to soak. This sense, though unusual, perhaps unexampled, is necessary in the English, unless the word imbue be adopted, which our writers seem not willing to receive.

Metals, corroded with a little acid, turn into rust, which is an earth tasteless and indissolvable in water; and this earth, imbibed with more acid, becomes a metallick salt. Newton.

Imbi'ber. n. s. [from imbibe.] That which drinks or sucks.

Salts are strong imbibers of sulphureous steams. Arbuthnot.

Imbibi'tion. n. s. [imbibition, French; from imbibe.] The act of sucking or drinking in.

Most powders grow more coherent by mixture of water than of oil: the reason is the congruity of bodies, which maketh a perfecter imbibition and incorporation. Bacon.

Heat and cold have a virtual transition, without communication of substance, but in moisture not; and to all madefaction there is required an imbibition. Bacon.

A drop of oil, let fall upon a sheet of white paper, that part of it, which, by the imbibition of the liquor, acquires a greater continuity and some transparency, will appear much darker than the rest; many of the incident beams of light being now transmitted, that otherwise would be reflected. Boyle.

To Imbi'tter. v. a. [from bitter.]

1. To make bitter.
2. To deprive of pleasure; to make unhappy.

Let them extinguish their passions which imbitter their lives, and deprive them of their share in the happiness of the community. Addison.

3. To exasperate.

To Imbo'dy. v. a. [from body.]

1. To condense to a body.
2. To invest with matter.

An opening cloud reveals
An heav'nly form imbody'd, and array'd
With robes of light. Dryden.

Though assiduity in the most fixed cogitation be no trouble to immaterialised spirits, yet is it more than our embodied souls can bear without lassitude. Glanville.

3. To bring together into one mass or company.

I by vow am so embodied yours,
That she which marries you must marry me. Shakespeare.

Never since created, man
Met such imbodied force, as nam'd with these,
Could merit more than that small infantry
Warr'd on by cranes. Milton.

Under their head embody'd all in one. Milton.

Then Clausus came, who led a num'rous band
Of troops embodied, from the Sabine land. Dryden.

4. To inclose. Improper.

In those strata we shall meet with the same metal or mineral imbodied in stone, or lodged in coal, that elsewhere we found in marle. Woodward.

To Imbo'dy. v. n. To unite into one mass; to coalesce.

The foul grows clotted by contagion,
Imbodies and imbrutes, 'till she quite lose
The divine property of her first being. Milton.

The idea of white, which snow yielded yesterday, and another idea of white from another snow to-day, put together in your mind, imbody and run into one. Locke.

To Imbo'il. v. n. [from boil.] To exestuate; to effervesce; to move with violent agitation like hot liquor in a caldron.

With whose reproach and odious menace,
The knight imboiling in his haughty heart,
Knit all his forces, and 'gan soon unbrace
His grasping hold. Spenser.

To Imbo'lden. v. a. [from bold.] To raise to confidence; to encourage.

'Tis necessary he should die:
Nothing imboldens sin so much as mercy. Shakespeare.

I think myself in better plight for a lender than you are, the which hath something imboldened me to this unseasoned intrusion. Shakespeare.

I was the more imboldened, because I found I had a soul congenial to his. Dryden.

Nor flight was left, nor hopes to force his way;
Imbolden'd by despair, he stood at bay. Dryden.

Their virtues and superior genius imboldened them, in great exigencies of state, to attempt the service of their prince and country out of the common forms. Swift.

To Imbo'som. v. a. [from bosom.]

1. To hold on the bosom; to cover fondly with the folds of one's garment; to hide under any cover.

The father infinite,
By whom in bliss imbosom'd sat the son. Milton.

Villages imbosom'd soft in trees,
And spiry towns by surging columns mark'd. Thomson.

2. To admit to the heart, or to affection.

But glad desire, his late emboson'd guest,
Yet but a babe, with milk of sight he nurst. Sidney.

Who glad t' emboson his affection vile,
Did all she might, more plainly to appear. Spenser.

To Imbo'und. v. a. [from bound.] To inclose; to shut in.

That sweet breath,
Which was embounded in this beauteous clay. Shakespeare.

To Imbo'w. v. a. [from bow.] To arch; to vault.

Prince Arthur gave a box of diamond sure,
Imbowed with gold and gorgeous ornament. Spenser.

Imbowed windows be pretty retiring places for conference: they keep both the wind and sun off. Bacon.

Let my due feet never fail
To walk the studious cloister's pale,
And love the high embowed roof,
With antick pillar massy proof. Milton.

Imbo'wment. n. s. [from imbow.] Arch; vault.

The roof all open, not so much as any embowment near any of the walls left. Bacon.

To Imbo'wer. v. a. [from bower.] To cover with a bower; to shelter with trees.

And stooping thence to Ham's embowering walks,
In spotless peace retir'd. Thomson.

To Imbra'ngle. v. a. To intangle. A low word.

With subtle cobweb cheats
They're catch'd in knotted law, like nets;
In which, when once they are imbrangled,
The more they stir, the more they're tangled. Hudibras.

Imbri'cated. adj. [from imbrex, Latin.] Indented with concavities; bent and hollowed like a roof or gutter-tile.

Imbrica'tion. n. s. [imbrex, Latin.] Concave indenture.

To Imbro'wn. v. a. [from brown.] To make brown; to darken; to obscure; to cloud.

Where the morning sun first warmly smote
The open field, and where the unpierc'd shade
Imbrown'd the noontide bow'rs. Milton.

The walking crew,
At thy request, support the miry shoe;
The foot grows black that was with dirt imbrown'd,
And in thy pocket gingling half-pence sound. Gay.

Another age shall see the golden ear
Imbrown the slope, and nod on the parterre. Pope.

Imbrown'd with native bronze, lo! Henly stands. Pope.

To Imbru'e. v. a. [from in and brue.]

1. To steep; to soak; to wet much or long.

Thou mad'st many hearts to bleed
Of mighty victors, with wide wounds embru'd,
And by thy cruel darts to thee subdu'd. Spenser.

There streams a spring of blood so fast
From those deep wounds, as all embru'd the face
Of that accursed caitiff. Daniel.

The merciless Turks, embrued with the Christian blood, were weary of slaughter, and began greedily to seek after the spoil. Knolles.

At me, as at a mark, his bow he drew,
Whose arrows in my blood their wings imbrue. Sandys.

Lucius pities the offenders,
That would embrue their hands in Cato's blood. Addison.

Lo! these hands in murder are imbru'd,
Those trembling feet by justice are pursu'd. Prior.

These, were two ways in equal parts divide,
The direful monster from afar descry'd,
Two bleeding babes depending at her side;
Whose panting vitals, warm with life, she draws,
And in their hearts embrues her cruel claws. Pope.

His virgin sword Ægysthus' veins imbru'd;
The murd'rer fell, and blood atton'd for blood. Pope.

A good man chuses rather to pass by a verbal injury than imbrue his hands in blood. Clarissa.

IMMATE'RIAL. adj. [immateriel, Fr. in and materia, Latin.]

1. Incorporeal; diſtinct from matter; void of matter.

Angels are ſpirits immaterial and intellectual, the glorious inhabitants of thoſe ſacred palaces, where there is nothing but light and immortality; no ſhadow of matter for tears, diſcontentments, griefs, and uncomfortable paſſions to work upon; but all joy, tranquillity, and peace, even for ever and ever, do dwell. Hooker.

As then the ſoul a ſubſtance hath alone,
Beſides the body, in which ſhe is confin'd;
So hath ſhe not a body of her own,
But is a ſpirit, and immaterial mind. Daviet.

Thoſe immaterial felicities we expect, ſuggeſt the neceſſity of preparing our appetites, without which heaven can be no heaven to us. Decay of Piety.

No man that owns the exiſtence of an infinite ſpirit can doubt of the poſſibility of a finite ſpirit; that is, ſuch a thing as is immaterial, and does not contain any principle of corruption. Tillotſon.

2. Unimportant; without weight; impertinent; without relation. This ſenſe has crept into the converſation and writings of barbarians; but ought to be utterly rejected.

IMMATE'RIALITY. n. ſ. [from immaterial.] Incorporeity; diſtinctneſs from body or matter.

When we know cogitation is the prime attribute of a ſpirit, we infer its immateriality, and thence its immortality. Watts.

IMMATE'RIALLY. adv. [from immaterial.] In a manner not depending upon matter.

The viſible ſpecies of things ſtrike not our ſenſes immaterially; but ſtreaming in corporal rays, do carry with them the qualities of the object from whence they flow, and the medium through which they paſs. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

IMMATE'RIALIZED. adj. [from in and materia, Latin.] Diſtinct from matter; incorporeal.

Through aſſiduity in the moſt fixed cogitation be no trouble to immaterialized ſpirits, yet is it more than our imbodied ſouls can bear without laſſitude. Glanville.

Bodies produce ideas in us manifeſtly by impulſe. Locke.

Bodies, from the impulſe of a fluid, can only gravitate in proportion to their ſurfaces, and not according to their quantity of matter, which is contrary to experience. Cheyne.

2. Influence acting upon the mind; motive; idea.

Mean time, by Jove's impulſe, Mezentius arm'd, Succeeded Turnus. Dryden.

Theſe were my natural impulſes for the undertaking; but there was an accidental motive, which was full as forcible. Dry.

Moſes ſaw the buſh burn without being conſumed, and heard a voice out of it: this was ſomething, beſides finding an impulſe upon his mind to go to Pharaoh, that he might bring his brethren out of Egypt. Locke.

3. Hoſtile impreſſion.

Like two great rocks againſt the raging tide,
Unmov'd the two united chiefs abide,
Suſtain th' impulſe, and receive the war. Prior.

IMPU'LSION. n. ſ. [impulſion, Fr. impulſus, Latin.]

1. The agency of body in motion upon body.

The motion in the minute parts of any ſolid body paſſeth without ſound; for that ſound that is heard ſometimes is produced only by the breaking of the air, and not by the impulſion of the air. Bacon.

To the impulſion there is requiſite the force of the body that moveth, and the reſiſtance of the body that is moved; and if the body be too great, it yieldeth too little; and if it be too ſmall, it reſiſteth too little. Bacon.

2. Influence operating upon the mind.

But thou didſt plead
Divine impulſion, prompting how thou might'ſt
Find ſome occaſion to infeſt our foes. Milton.

IMPU'LSIVE. adj. [impulſif, Fr. from impulſe.] Having the power of impulſe; moving; impellent.

Nature and duty bind him to obedience;
But thoſe being placed in a lower ſphere,
His fierce ambition, like the higeſt mover,
Has hurried with a ſtrong impulſive motion
Againſt their proper courſe. Denham.

What is the fountain or impulſive cauſe of this prevention of ſin? It is perfectly free grace. South.

Poor men! poor papers! we and they
Do ſome impulſive force obey,
And are but play'd with, do not play. Prior.

IMPU'NITY. n. ſ. [impunité, Fr. impunitas, Latin.] Freedom from puniſhment; exemption from puniſhment.

In the condition of ſubjects they will gladly continue, as long as they may be protected and juſtly governed, without oppreſſion on the one ſide, or impunity on the other. Davies.

A general impunity would confirm them; for the vulgar will never be brought to believe that there is a crime where they ſee no penalty. Addiſon.

Men, potent in the commonwealth, will employ their illgotten influence towards procuring impunity, or extorting undue favours for themſelves or dependents. Atterbury.

IMPU'RE. adj. [impur, Fr. impurus, Latin.]

1. Contrary to ſanctity; unhallowed; unholy.

INA'RABLE. adj. [in and aro, Latin.] Not capable of tillage. Dict.

To INA'RCH. v. a. [in and arch.]

Inarching is a method of grafting, which is commonly called grafting by approach. This method of grafting is uſed when the ſtock and the tree may be joined: take the branch you would inarch, and, having fitted it to that part of the ſtock where you intend to join it, pare away the rind and wood on one ſide about three inches in length: after the ſame manner cut the ſtock or branch in the place where the graft is to be united, ſo that they may join equally together that the ſap may meet: then cut a little tongue upwards in the graft, and make a notch in the ſtock to admit it; ſo that when they are joined the tongue will prevent their ſlipping, and the graft will more cloſely unite with the ſtock. Having thus placed them exactly together, tie them; then cover the place with grafting clay, to prevent the air from entering to dry the wound, or the wet from getting in to rot the ſtock: you ſhould fix a ſtake into the ground, to which that part of the ſtock, as alſo the graft, ſhould be faſtened, to prevent the wind from breaking them aſunder. In this manner they are to remain about four months, in which time they will be ſufficiently united; and the graft may then be cut from the mother-tree, obſerving to ſlope it off cloſe to the ſtock, and cover the jointed parts with freſh grafting clay. The operation is always performed in April or May, and is commonly practiſed upon oranges, myrtles, jaſmines, walnuts, firrs, and pines, which will not ſucceed by common grafting or budding. Miller.

INARTI'CULATE. adj. [inarticulé, Fr. in and articulate.] Not uttered with diſtinctneſs like that of the ſyllables of human ſpeech.

Obſerve what inarticulate ſounds reſemble any of the particular letters. Wilkins.

INCOEXI'STENCE. n. f. [in and coexistence.] The quality of not existing together; non-association of existence.

Another more incurable part of ignorance, which sets us more remote from a certain knowledge of the coexistence or incoexistence of different ideas in the same subject, is, that there is no discoverable connexion between any secondary quality and those primary qualities it depends on. Locke.

INCO'G. adv. [corrupted by mutilation from incognito, Latin.] Unknown; in private.

But if you're rough, and use him like a dog,
Depend upon it, he'll remain incog. Addison.

INCO'GITANCY. n. f. [incogitantia, Latin.] Want of thought.

One man's fancies are laws to others, who convey them as such to their succeeders, who afterwards misname all unobsequiousness to their incogitancy presumption. Boyle.

Next to the stupid and merely vegetable state of incogitancy, we may rank partial and piece-meal consideration. Dec. of Piety.

INCO'GITATIVE. adj. [in and cogitative.] Wanting the power of thought.

Purely material beings, as clippings of our beards, and sensible, thinking, perceiving beings, such as we find ourselves, we will call cogitative and incogitative beings. Locke.

INCO'GNITO. adv. [incognitus, Latin.] In a state of concealment.

'Twas long ago
Since gods came down incognito. Prior.

INCOHE'RENCE. } INCOHE'RENCY. } n. f. [in and coherence.]

1. Want of connexion; incongruity; inconsequence; want of dependence of one part upon another.

I find that laying the intermediate ideas naked in their due order, shews the incoherence of the argumentations better than syllogisms. Locke.

Incoherences in matter, and suppositions without proofs, put handsomely together, are apt to pass for strong reason. Locke.

2. Want of cohesion; looseness of material parts.

If plaister be beaten into an impalpable power, when poured out it will emulate a liquor, by reason that the smalness and incoherence of the parts do both make them easy to be put into motion, and makes the pores they intercept so small, that they interrupt not the unity or continuity of the mass. Boyle.

INCOHE'RENT. adj. [in and coherent.]

1. Inconsequential; inconsistent; having no dependence of one part upon another.

We have instances of perception whilst we are asleep, and retain the memory of them; but how extravagant and incoherent are they, and how little conformable to the perfection of a rational being! Locke.

2. Without cohesion; loose; not fixed to each other.

Had the strata of stone become solid, but the matter whereof they consist continued lax and incoherent, they had consequently been as pervious as those of marle or gravel. Woodw.

INCOHE'RENTLY. adv. [from incoherent.] Inconsistently; inconsequentially.

The character of Eurylochus is the imitation of a person confounded with fears, speaking irrationally and incoherently. Broome.

INCOMBUSTIBI'LITY. n. f. [from incombustible.] The quality of resisting fire so that it cannot consume.

The stone in the Apennines is remarkable for its shining quality, and the amianthus for its incombustibility. Ray.

INCOMBU'STIBLE. adj. [incombustible, Fr. in and combustible.] Not to be consumed by fire.

It agrees in this common quality ascribed unto both, of being incombustible, and not consumable by fire. Wilkins.

INCOMBU'STIBLENESS. n. f. [from incombustible.] The quality of not being wasted by fire.

I'NCOME. n. f. [in and come.] Revenue; produce of any thing.

Thou who repinest at the plenty of thy neighbour, and the greatness of his incomes, consider what are frequently the dismal consequences of all this. South.

No fields afford
So large an income to the village lord. Dryden.

St. Gaul has scarce any lands belonging to it, and little or no income but what arises from its trade; the great support of this little state is its linen manufacture. Addison.

Notwithstanding the large incomes annexed to some few of her preferments, this church hath in the whole little to subsist on. Atterbury.

INCOMMENSURABI'LITY. n. f. [from incommensurable.] The state of one thing with respect to another, when they cannot be compared by any common measure.

INCOMME'NSURABLE. adj. [French; from in, con, and mensuralis, Latin.] Not to be reduced to any measure common to both; not to be measured together, such as that the proportion of one to the other can be told.

Our disputations about vacuum or space, incommensurable quantities, the infinite divisibility of matter, and eternal duration, will lead us to see the weakness of our nature. Watts.

INCOMME'NSURATE. adj. [in, con, and mensura, Latin.] Not admitting one common measure.

The diagonal line and side of a quadrate, which, to our apprehension, are incommensurate, are yet commensurable to the infinite comprehension of the divine intellect. More.

As all other measures of time are reducible to these three; so we labour to reduce these three, though strictly of themselves incommensurate to one another, for civil use, measuring the greater by the less. Holder.

If the year comprehend days, it is but as any greater space of time may be said to comprehend a less, though the less space be incommensurate to the greater. Holder.

To INCO'MMODATE. } To INCOMMO'DE. } v. a. [incommodo, Lat. incommoder, Fr.] To be inconvenient to; to hinder or embarrass without very great injury.

A gnat, planted upon the horn of a bull, begged the bull's pardon; but rather than incommode ye, says he, I'll remove. L'Estrange.

Although they sometimes molest and incommode the inhabitants of some parts, yet the agent, whereby both the one and the other is effected, is of that indispensible necessity to the earth and to mankind, that they could not subsist without it. Woodward.

INCOMMO'DIOUS. adj. [incommodus, Latin.] Inconvenient; vexatious without great mischief.

Things of general benefit, for in this world what is so perfect that no inconvenience doth ever follow it? may by some accident be incommodious to a few. Hooker.

Men's intentions in speaking are to be understood, without frequent explanations and incommodious interruptions. Locke.

INCOMMO'DIOUSLY. adv. [from incommodious.] Inconveniently; not at ease.

INCOMMO'DIOUSNESS. n. f. [from incommodious.] Inconvenience.

Diseases, disorders, and the incommodiousness of external nature, are inconsistent with happiness. Burnet.

INCOMMO'DITY. n. f. [incommodité, Fr. incommoditas, Latin.] Inconvenience; trouble.

Declare your opinion, what incommodity you have conceived to be in the common law, which I would have thought most free from all such dislike. Spenser.

If iron can be incorporated with flint or stone, without over great charge, or other incommodity, the cheapness doth make the compound stuff profitable. Bacon.

By considering the region and the winds, one might so cast the rooms which shall most need fire, that he should little fear the incommodity of smoak. Wotton.

INCOMMUNICABI'LITY. n. f. [from incommunicable.] The quality of not being impartible.

INCOMMU'NICABLE. adj. [incommunicable, Fr. in and communicable.]

1. Not impartible; not to be made the common right, property, or quality of more than one.

They cannot ask more than I can give, may I but reserve to myself the incommunicable jewel of my conscience. K. Charles.

Only the God of nature perfectly knows her; and light without darkness is the incommunicable claim of him that dwells in light inaccessible. Glanville.

It was agreed on both sides, that there was one supreme excellency, which was incommunicable to any creatures. Stilling.

2. Not to be expressed; not to be told.

Neither did he treat them with these peculiarities of favour in the extraordinary discoveries of the gospel only, but also of those incommunicable revelations of the divine love, in reference to their own personal interest in it. South.

INCOMMU'NICABLY. adv. [from incommunicable.] In a manner not to be imparted or communicated.

To annihilate is both in reason, and by the consent of divines, as incommunicably the effect of a power divine, and above nature, as is creation itself. Hakewill.

INCOMMU'NICATING. adj. [in and communicating.] Having no intercourse with each other.

The judgments and administrations of common justice carry a consonancy one to another, whereby both are preserved from that confusion that would ensue, if the administration was by several incommunicating hands, or by provincial establishments. Hale.

INCOMPA'CT. } INCOMPA'CTED. } adj. [in and compacted.] Not joined; not cohering.

Salt, say they, is the basis of solidity and permanency in compound compound bodies, without which the other four elements might be variously blended, but would remain incompacted. Boyle.

INCO'MPARABLE. adj. [incomparable, Fr. in and comparable.] Excellent above compare; excellent beyond all competition.

My heart would not suffer me to omit any occasion, whereby I might make the incomparable Pamela see how much extraordinary devotion I bore to her service. Sidney.

A most incomparable man, breath'd as it were
To an untirable and continuate goodness. Shakespeare.

Her words do shew her wit incomparable. Shakespeare.

Now this mask
Was cried incomparable, and th' ensuing night
Made it a fool and beggar. Shakespeare.

If I could leave this argument of your incomparable beauty, I might turn to one which would equally oppress me with its greatness. Dryden.

INCO'MPARABLY. adv. [from incomparable.]

1. Beyond comparison; without competition.

A founder it had, whom I think incomparably the wisest man that ever the French church did enjoy, since the hour it enjoyed him. Hooker.

Self-preservation will oblige a man voluntarily to undergo any less evil, to secure himself but from the probability of an evil incomparably greater. South.

2. Excellently; to the highest degree. A low phrase.

There are the heads of Antoninus Pius, the Faustina's, and Marcus Aurelius, all incomparably well cut. Addison.

INCOMPA'SSIONATE. adj. [in and compassionate.] Void of pity; void of tenderness.

INCOMPATIBI'LITY. n. s. [properly incompetibility, in and competo, Latin.] Inconsistency of one thing with another.

He overcame that natural incompatibility, which hath been noted between the vulgar and the sovereign favour. Wotton.

The reason of the stress rests not upon the incompetibility of excess of one infinitude above another, either in intension or extension; but the incompetibility of any multitude to be infinite. Hale.

INCOMPA'TIBLE. adj. [incompatible, French; rather incompetible, as it is sometimes written; in and competo, Lat.] Inconsistent with something else; such as cannot subsist or cannot be possessed together with something else.

Fortune and love have ever been so incompatible, that it is no wonder, madam, if, having had so much of the one for you, I have ever found so little of the other for myself. Suckl.

May not the outward expressions of love in many good Christians be greater to some other object than to God? Or is this incompetible with the sincerity of the love of God? Hamm.

The repugnancy of infinitude is equally incompetible to continued or successive motion, and depends upon the incompossibility of things successive with infinitude. Hale.

We know those colours which have a friendship with each other, and those which are incompatible, by mixing together those colours of which we would make trial. Dryden.

Sense I have proved to be incompatible with mere bodies, even those of the most compound and elaborate textures. Bent.

INCOMPA'TIBLY. adv. [for incompetibly, from incompatible.] Inconsistently.

INCO'MPETENCY. n. s. [in and competence, Fr. from incompetent.] Inability; want of adequate ability or qualification.

Our not being able to discern the moving of a shadow of a dial-plate, or that of the index upon a clock, ought to make us sensible of the incompetency of our eyes to discern some motions of natural bodies incomparably slower than these. Boyle.

INCOMPETENT. adj. [in and competent.] Not suitable; not adequate; not proportionate. In the civil law it denotes some defect of right to do any thing.

Richard III. had a resolution, out of hatred to his brethren, to disable their issues, upon false and incompetent pretexts, the one of attainder, the other of illegitimation. Bacon.

Every speck does not blind a man, nor does every infirmity make one unable to discern, or incompetent to reprove the grosser faults of others. Government of the Tongue.

I thank you for the commission you have given me: how I have acquitted myself of it, must be left to the opinion of the world, in spight of any protestation which I can enter against the present age, as incompetent or corrupt judges. Dryden.

Laymen, with equal advantages of parts, are not the most incompetent judges of sacred things. Dryden.

An equal attraction on all sides of all matter, is just equal to no attraction at all; and by this means all the motion in the universe must proceed from external impulse alone, which is an incompetent cause for the formation of a world. Bentley.

INCO'MPETENTLY. adv. [from incompetent.] Unsuitably; unduly.

INCOMPLE'TE. adj. [in and complete.] Not perfect; not finished.

It pleaseth him in mercy to account himself incomplete and maimed without us. Hooker.

In incomplete ideas we are apt to impose on ourselves, and wrangle with others, especially where they have particular and familiar names. Locke.

INCOMPLE'TENESS. n. s. [from incomplete.] Imperfection; unfinished state.

The incompleteness of our seraphick lover's happiness, in his fruitions, proceeds not from their want of satisfactoriness, but of an entire possession. Boyle.

INCOMPLI'ANCE. n. s. [in and compliance.]

1. Untractableness; impracticableness; contradictious temper.

Self-conceit produces peevishness and incompliance of humour in things lawful and indifferent. Tillotson.

2. Refusal of compliance.

Consider the vast disproportion between the worst inconveniences that can attend our incompliance with men, and the eternal displeasure of an offended God. Rogers.

INCOMPO'SED. adj. [in and composed.] Disturbed; discomposed; disordered.

Somewhat incomposed they are in their trimming, and extraordinary tender of their young ones. Howel.

INCOMPOSSIBI'LITY. n. s. [from incompossible.] Quality of being not possible but by the negation or destruction of something; inconsistency with something.

The manifold incompossibilities and lubricities of matter cannot have the same fixednesses in any modification. More.

Though the repugnancy of infinitude be equally incompetible to continued or successive motion, and depends upon the incompossibility of the very nature of things successive or extensive with infinitude, yet that incompossibility is more conspicuous in discrete quantity, that ariseth from individuals already actually distinguished. Hale.

INCOMPO'SSIBLE. adj. [in, con, and possible.] Not possible together; not possible but by the negation of something else.

INCOMPREHE'NSIBILITY. n. s. [incomprehensibilité, Fr. from incomprehensible.] Unconceivableness; superiority to human understanding.

INCOMPREHE'NSIBLE. adj. [incomprehensible, Fr. in and comprehensible.]

1. Not to be conceived; not to be fully understood.

His precepts tend to the improving and perfecting the most valuable part of us; and annexing incomprehensible rewards as an eternal weight of glory. Hammond.

One thing more is incomprehensible in this matter. Locke.

The laws of vegetation, life, sustenance, and propagation, are the arbitrary pleasures of God, and may vary in manners incomprehensible to our imaginations. Bentley.

2. Not to be contained. Not now used.

Presence every where is the sequel of an infinite and incomprehensible substance; for what can be every where but that which can no where be comprehended? Hooker.

INCOMPREHE'NSIBLENESS. n. s. [from incomprehensible.] Unconceivableness.

I might argue from God's incomprehensibleness: if we could believe nothing but what we have ideas of, it would be impossible for us to believe God is incomprehensible. Watts.

INCOMPREHE'NSIBLY. adv. [from incomprehensible.] In a manner not to be conceived.

We cannot but be assured that the God, of whom and from whom are all things, is incomprehensibly infinite. Locke.

INCOMPRE'SSIBLE. adj. [incompressible, Fr. in and compressible.] Not capable of being compressed into less space.

Their hardness is the reason why water is incompressible, when the air lodged in it is exhausted. Cheyne.

INCOMPRESSIBI'LITY. n. s. [from incompressible.] Incapacity to be squeezed into less room.

INCONCU'RRING. adj. [in and concur.] Not concurring.

They derive effects not only from inconcurring causes, but things devoid of all efficiency. Brown.

INCONCE'ALABLE. adj. [in and conceal.] Not to be hid; not to be kept secret.

The inconcealable imperfections of ourselves will hourly prompt us our corruption, and loudly tell us we are sons of earth. Brown.

INCONCE'IVABLE. adj. [inconceivable, Fr. in and conceivable.] Incomprehensible; not to be conceived by the mind.

Such are Christ's promises, divine inconceivable promises; a bliss to be enjoyed to all eternity, and that by way of return for a weak obedience of some few years. Hammond.

It is inconceivable to me, that a spiritual substance should represent an extended figure. Locke.

How two ethers can be diffused through all space, one of which acts upon the other, and by consequence is reacted upon, without retarding, shattering, dispersing, and confounding one another's motions, is inconceivable. Newton.

INCONCE'IVABLY. adv. [from inconceivable.] In a manner beyond comprehension; to a degree beyond human comprehension.

Does that man take a rational course to preserve himself, who refuses the endurance of these lesser troubles, to secure himself from a condition inconceivably more miserable? South.

INCONCE'PTIBLE. adj. [in and conceptible; conceptus, Latin.] Not to be conceived; incomprehensible; inconceivable. A word not used.

It is inconceptible how any such man, that hath stood the shock of an æternal duration without corruption, should after be corrupted. Hale.

INCONCLU'DENT. adj. [in and concludens, Latin.] Inferring no conſequence.

The depoſitions of witneſſes themſelves, as being falſe, various, contrariant, ſingle, inconcludent. Ayliffe.

From that which is but true in a qualified ſenſe, an inconditional and abſolute verity is inferred. Brown.

INCONDI'TIONATE. adj. [in and condition.] Not limited; not reſtrained by any conditions; abſolute.

They aſcribe to God, in relation to every man, an eternal, unchangeable, and inconditionate decree of election or reprobation. Boyle.

INCONFO'RMITY. n. ſ. [in and conformity.] Incompliance with the practice of others.

We have thought their opinion to be, that utter inconformity with the church of Rome was not an extremity whereunto we ſhould be drawn for a time, but the very mediocrity itſelf, wherein they meant we ſhould ever continue. Hooker.

INCONFU'SION. n. ſ. [in and confuſion.] Diſtinctneſs.

The cauſe of the confuſion in ſounds, and the inconfuſion in ſpecies viſible, is, for that the ſight worketh in right lines, and ſo there can be no coincidence in the eye; but ſounds that move in oblique and arcuate lines, muſt needs encounter and diſturb the one the other. Bacon.

INCONGRUENCE. n. ſ. [in and congruence.] Unſuitableneſs; want of adaptation.

Humidity is but relative, and depends upon the congruity or incongruence of the component particles of the liquor to the pores of the bodies it touches. Boyle.

INCONGRU'ITY. n. ſ. [incongruité, Fr. from incongruous.]

1. Unſuitableneſs of one thing to another.

The fathers make uſe of this acknowledgment of the incongruity of images to the Deity, from thence to prove the incongruity of the worſhip of them. Stillingfleet.

2. Inconſiſtency; inconſequence; abſurdity; impropriety.

To avoid abſurdities and incongruities, is the ſame law eſtabliſhed for both arts: the painter is not to paint a cloud at the bottom of a picture, nor the poet to place what is proper to the end in the beginning of a poem. Dryden.

3. Diſagreement of parts; want of ſymmetry.

She, whom after what form ſoe'er we ſee,
Is diſcord and rude incongruity;
She, ſhe is dead, ſhe's dead. Donne.

INCO'NGRUOUS. adj. [incongru, Fr. in and congruous.]

1. Unſuitable; not fitting.

Wiſer heathens condemned the worſhip of God as incongruous to a divine nature, and a diſparagement to the Deity. Stillingfleet.

2. Inconſiſtent; abſurd.

INCO'NGRUOUSLY. adv. [from incongruous.] Improperly; unfitly.

INCONNE'XEDLY. adv. [in and connex.] Without any connexion or dependence.

Others aſcribed hereto, as a cauſe, what perhaps but caſually or inconnexedly ſucceeds. Brown.

INCO'NSCIONABLE. adj. [in and conſcionable.] Void of the ſenſe of good and evil; without influence of conſcience.

So inconſcionable are theſe common people, and ſo little feeling have they of God, or their own ſouls good. Spenſer.

INCO'NSEQUENCE. n. ſ. [inconſequence, Fr. inconſequentia, Lat.] Inconcluſiveneſs; want of juſt inference.

This he beſtows the name of many fallacies upon; and runs on with ſhewing the inconſequence of it, as though he did in earneſt believe it were an impertinent anſwer. Stillingfleet.

INCO'NSEQUENT. adj. [in and conſequens, Lat.] Without juſt concluſion; without regular inference.

The ground he aſſumes is unſound, and his illation from thence deduced inconſequent. Hakewill.

Men reſt not in falſe apprehenſions without abſurd and inconſequent deductions from fallacious foundations, and miſapprehended mediums, erecting concluſions no way inferible from their premiſes. Brown.

INCONSI'DERABLE. adj. [in and conſiderable.] Unworthy of notice; unimportant.

No, I am an inconſiderable fellow, and know nothing. Denham.

The moſt inconſiderable of creatures may at ſome time or other come to revenge itſelf upon the greateſt. L'Eſtrange.

Caſting my eyes upon the ants, continually taken up with a thouſand cares, very inconſiderable with reſpect to us, but of the greateſt importance for them, they appeared to me worthy of my curioſity. Addiſon.

May not planets and comets perform their motions more freely, and with leſs reſiſtance, in this ethereal medium than in any fluid, which fills all ſpace adequately without leaving any pores, and by conſequence is much denſer than quickſilver or gold? And may not its reſiſtance be ſo ſmall as to be inconſiderable? Newton.

If we were under any real fear of the papiſts, it would be hard to think us ſo ſtupid not to be equally apprehenſive with others, ſince we are likely to be the greateſt ſufferers; but we look upon them to be altogether as inconſiderable as the women and children. Swift.

Let no ſin appear ſmall or inconſiderable by which an almighty God is offended, and eternal ſalvation endangered. Rogers.

They present us with images more perfect than the life in any individual. Dryden.

Must the whole man, amazing thought! return
To the cold marble, or contracted urn?
And never shall those particles agree,
That were in life this individual he? Prior.

Know all the good that individuals find,
Lie in three words, health, peace, and competence. Pope.

We see each circumstance of art and individual of nature summoned together by the extent and fecundity of his imagination. Pope.

It would be wise in them, as individual and private mortals, to look back a little upon the storms they have raised, as well as those they have escaped. Swift.

The object of any particular idea is called an individual: so Peter is an individual man, London an individual city. Watts.

2. Undivided; not to be parted or disjoined.

To give thee being, I lent
Out of my sight to thee, nearest my heart,
Substantial life, to have thee by my side
Henceforth an individual solace dear. Milton.

Long eternity shall greet our bliss
With an individual kiss. Milton.

Under his great vicegerent reign abide
United, as one individual soul,
For ever happy. Milton.

INDIVIDUA'LITY. n. s. [from individual.] Separate or distinct existence.

Crambe would tell his instructor, that all men were not singular; that individuality could hardly be predicated of any man; for it was commonly said that a man is not the same he was, and that mad men are beside themselves. Arbuthnot.

INDIVI'DUALLY. adv. [from individual.] With separate or distinct existence; numerically.

How should that subsist solitarily by itself, which hath no substance, but individually the very same whereby others subsist with it. Hooker.

I dare not pronounce him omniscious, that being an attribute individually proper to the Godhead, and incommunicable to any created substance. Hakewill.

To INDIVI'DUATE. v. a. [from individuus, Latin.] To distinguish from others of the same species; to make single.

Life is individuated into infinite numbers, that have their distinct sense and pleasure. More against Atheism.

No man is capable of translating poetry, who, besides a genius to that art, is not a master both of his author's language and of his own; nor must we understand the language only of the poet, but his particular turn of thoughts and expression, which are the characters that distinguish and individuate him from all other writers. Dryden.

INDIVIDUA'TION. n. s. [from individuate.] That which makes an individual.

What is the principle of individuation? Or what is it that makes any one thing the same as it was before? Watts.

1. Introduction; entrance.

Theſe promiſes are fair, the parties ſure,
And our induction full of proſp'rous hope. Shakeſpeare.

2. Induction is when, from ſeveral particular propoſitions, we infer one general: as, the doctrine of the Socinians cannot be proved from the goſpels, it cannot be proved from the acts of the apoſtles, it cannot be proved from the epiſtles, nor the book of revelations; therefore it cannot be proved from the New Teſtament. Watts.

The inquiſition by induction is wonderful hard; for the things reported are full of fables, and new experiments can hardly be made but with extreme caution. Bacon.

Mathematical things are only capable of clear demonſtration: concluſions in natural philoſophy are proved by induction of experiments, things moral by moral arguments, and matters of fact by credible teſtimony. Tillotſon.

Although the arguing from experiments and obſervations by induction be no demonſtration of general concluſions, yet it is the beſt way of arguing which the nature of things admits of, and may be looked upon as ſo much the ſtronger by how much the induction is more general; and if no exception occur from phænomena, the concluſion may be general. Newton.

He brought in a new way of arguing from induction, and that grounded upon obſervation and experiments. Baker.

2. To infer is nothing but, by virtue of one propoſition laid down as true, to draw in another as true, i. e. to ſee or ſuppoſe ſuch a connection of the two ideas of the inferred propoſition. Locke.

Yet what thou can'ſt attain, which beſt may ſerve
To glorify the Maker, and infer
Thee alſo happier, ſhall not be with-held
Thy hearing. Milton.

Great,
Or bright, infers not excellence: the earth,
Though in compariſon of heav'n ſo ſmall,
Nor gliſtering, may of ſolid good contain
More plenty than the ſun, that barren ſhines. Milton.

One would wonder how, from ſo differing premiſſes, they ſhould all infer the ſame concluſion. Decay of Piety.

They have more opportunities than other men have of purchaſing publick eſteem, by deſerving well of mankind; and ſuch opportunities always infer obligations. Atterbury.

3. To offer; to produce.

Full well hath Clifford play'd the orator,
Inferring arguments of mighty force. Shakeſpeare.

INFERENCE. n. ſ. [inference, French; from infer.] Concluſion drawn from previous arguments.

Though it may chance to be right in the concluſion, it is yet unjuſt and miſtaken in the method of inference. Glanv.

Theſe inferences or concluſions are the effects of reaſoning, and the three propoſitions, taken all together, are called ſyllogiſm or argument. Watts.

INFE'RIBLE. adj. [from infer.] Deducible from premiſed grounds.

As ſimple miſtakes commonly beget fallacies, ſo men from fallacious foundations, and miſapprehended mediums, erect concluſions no way inferrible from their premiſſes. Brown.

INFERIO'RITY. n. ſ. [infériorité, Fr. from inferiour.] Lower ſtate of dignity or value.

The language, though not of equal dignity, yet as near approaching to it as our modern barbariſm will allow; and therefore we are to reſt contented with that only inferiority which is not poſſibly to be remedied. Dryden.

INFE'RIOUR. adj. [inferior, Lat. inferieur, French.]

1. Lower in place.
2. Lower in ſtation or rank of life.

A great perſon gets more by obliging his inferiour than by diſdaining him. South.

Infold nine acres of infernal ſpace. Dryden.

INFE'RNAL Stone. n. ſ.

Infernal ſtone, or the lunar cauſtick, is prepared from an evaporated ſolution of ſilver, or from cryſtals of ſilver. It is a very powerful cauſtick, eating away the fleſh and even the bones to which it is applied. Hill.

INFE'RTILE. adj. [infertile, Fr. in and fertile.] Unfruitful; not productive; without fecundity; infecund.

Ignorance being of itſelf, like ſtiff clay, an infertile ſoil, when pride comes to ſcorch and harden it, it grows perfectly impenetrable. Government of the Tongue.

INFERTI'LITY. n. ſ. [infertilité, Fr. from infertile.] Unfruitfulneſs; want of fertility.

The

The ſame diſtemperature of the air that occaſioned the plague occaſioned alſo the infertility or noxiouſneſs of the ſoil, whereby the fruits of the earth became either very ſmall, or very unwholſome. Hale.

To INFE'ST. v. a. [infeſter, Fr. infeſto, Latin.] To harraſs; to diſturb; to plague.

They ceaſed not, in the mean while, to ſtrengthen that part which in heart they favoured, and to infeſt by all means, under colour of other quarrels, their greateſt adverſaries in this cauſe. Hooker.

Although they were a people infeſted, and mightily hated of all others, yet was there nothing of force to work the ruin of their ſtate, 'till the time beforementioned was expired. Hook.

Unto my feeble breaſt
Come gently; but not with that mighty rage
Wherewith the martial troops thou do'ſt infeſt,
And hearts of greateſt heroes do'ſt enrage. Spenſer.

They were no mean, diſtreſſed, calamitous perſons that fled to him for refuge; but of ſo great quality, as it was apparent that they came not thither to protect their own fortune, but to infeſt and invade his. Bacon.

Theſe, ſaid the genius, are envy, avarice, ſuperſtition, love, with the like cares and paſſions that infeſt human life. Addiſon's Spectator.

INFIDE'LITY. n ſ. [infidelité, French; infidelitas, Lat.]

1. Want of faith.

The conſideration of the divine omnipotence and infinite wiſdom, and our own ignorance, are great inſtruments of ſilencing the murmurs of infidelity. Taylor.

2. Diſbelief of Chriſtianity.

One would fancy that infidels would be exempt from that ſingle fault, which ſeems to grow out of the imprudent fervours of religion; but ſo it is, that infidelity is propagated with as much fierceneſs and contention, as if the ſafety of mankind depended upon it. Addiſon.

3. Treachery; deceit.

The infidelities on the one part between the two ſexes, and the caprices on the other, the vanities and vexations attending even the moſt refined delights that make up his buſineſs of life, render it ſilly and uncomfortable. Spectator.

INFINITE. adj. [infini, French; infinitus, Latin.]

1. Unbounded; boundleſs; unlimited; immenſe; having no boundaries or limits to its nature.

Impoſſible it is, that God ſhould withdraw his preſence from any thing, becauſe the very ſubſtance of God is infinite. Hooker.

What's time, when on eternity we think?
A thouſand ages in that ſea muſt ſink:
Time's nothing but a word; a million
Is full as far from infinite as one. Denham.

Thou ſov'reign pow'r, whoſe ſecret will controuls
The inward bent and motion of our ſouls!
Why haſt thou plac'd ſuch infinite degrees
Between the cauſe and cure of my diſeaſe? Prior.

When we would think of infinite ſpace or duration, we at firſt make ſome very large idea; as perhaps of millions of ages or miles, which poſſibly we multiply ſeveral times. Locke.

Even an angel's comprehenſive thought
Cannot extend as far as thou haſt wrought:
Our vaſt conceptions are by ſwelling brought,
Swallowed and loſt in infinite, to nought. Dennis.

2. It is hyperbolically uſed for large; great.

I'NFINITELY. adv. [from infinite.] Without limits; without bounds; immenſely.

Infinitely the greater part of mankind have profeſſed to act under a full perſuaſion of this great article. Rogers.

I'NFINITENESS. n. ſ. [from infinite.] Immenſity; boundleſſneſs; infinity.

The cunning of his flattery, the readineſs of his tears, the infiniteneſs of his vows, were but among the weakeſt threads of his net. Stanley.

Let us always bear about us ſuch impreſſions of reverence, and fear of God, that we may humble ourſelves before his Almightineſs, and expreſs that infinite diſtance between his infiniteneſs and our weakneſſes. Taylor.

INFINITE'SIMAL. adj. [from infinite.] Infinitely divided.

INFI'NITIVE. adj. [infinitif, Fr. infinitivus, Latin.] In grammar, the infinitive affirms, or intimates the intention of affirming, which is one uſe of the indicative; but then it does not do it abſolutely. Clarke.

INFI'NITUDE. n. ſ. [from infinite.]

1. Infinity; immenſity.

Confuſion heard his voice, and wild uproar
Stood rul'd, ſtood vaſt infinitude confin'd. Milton.

Though the repugnancy of infinitude be equally incompetible to continued or ſucceſſive motion, or continued quantity, and depends upon the incompoſſibility of the very nature of things ſucceſſive or extenſive with infinitude; yet that incompoſſibility is more conſpicuous in diſcrete quantity, that ariſeth from parts actually diſtinguiſhed. Hale.

2. Boundleſs number.

We ſee all the good ſenſe of the age cut out, and minced into almoſt an infinitude of diſtinctions. Addiſon.

INFI'NITY. n. ſ. [infinité, French; infinitas, Latin.]

1. Immenſity; boundleſſneſs; unlimited qualities.

There cannot be more infinities than one; for one of them would limit the other. Raleigh.

The better, the more deſirable; that therefore muſt be deſirable, wherein there is infinity of goodneſs; ſo that if any thing deſirable may be infinite, that muſt needs be the higheſt of all things that are deſired: no good is infinite but only God, therefore he is our felicity and bliſs. Hooker.

2. Endleſs number. An hyperbolical uſe of the word.

Homer has concealed faults under an infinity of admirable beauties. Broome.

The liver, being ſwelled, compreſſeth the ſtomach, ſtops the circulation of the juices, and produceth an infinity of bad ſymptoms. Arbuthnot.

INFI'RM. adj. [infirme, French; infirmus, Latin.]

1. Weak; feeble; diſabled of body.

Here ſtand I your brave;
A poor, infirm, weak, and deſpis'd old man. Shakeſp.

I am with child, ye bloody homicides. Shakeſpeare.

If he had done or ſaid any thing amiſs, he deſired their worſhips to think it was his infirmities. Shakeſpeare.

Are the infirmities of the body, pains and diſeaſes, his complaints? His faith reminds him of the day when this corruptible ſhall put on incorruption, and this mortal immortality. Rogers.

2. Failing; weakneſs; fault.

A friend ſhould bear a friend's infirmities;
But Brutus makes mine greater than they are. Shakeſpeare.

Many infirmities made it appear more requiſite, that a wiſer man ſhould have the application of his intereſt. Clarenden.

3. Diſeaſe;

How difficult is it to preſerve a great name, when he that has acquired it is ſo obnoxious to ſuch little weakneſſes and infirmities, as are no ſmall diminution to it, when diſcovered. Addiſon's Spectator.

3. Diſeaſe; malady.

General laws are like general rules of phyſick, according whereunto, as now, no wiſe man will deſire himſelf to be cured, if there be joined with his diſeaſe ſome ſpecial accident, in regard that thereby others in the ſame infirmity, but without the like accident, may. Hooker.

INFI'RMNESS. n. ſ. [from infirm.] Weakneſs; feebleneſs.

Politicians, who would rather ingratiate themſelves with their ſovereign than promote his real ſervice, accommodate his counſels to his inclinations. Spectator, N° 479.

INGRA'TITUDE. n. ſ. [ingratitude, French; in and gratitude.] Retribution of evil for good; unthankfulneſs.

Ingratitude! thou marble-hearted fiend,
More hideous, when thou ſhew'ſt thee in a child,
Than the ſea monſter. Shakeſpeare.

Ingratitude is abhorred both by God and man, and vengeance attends thoſe that repay evil for good. L'Eſtrange.

Nor was it with ingratitude return'd,
In equal fires the bliſsful couple burn'd;
One joy poſſeſs'd 'em both, and in one grief they mourn'd.
Dryden.

INGRE'DIENT. n. ſ. [ingredient, French; ingrediens, Latin.] Component part of a body, conſiſting of different materials. It is commonly uſed of the ſimples of a medicine.

The ointment is made of divers ingredients, whereof the hardeſt to come by is the moſs upon the ſkull of a dead man unburied. Bacon.

So deep the pow'r of theſe ingredients pierc'd,
Ev'n to the inmoſt ſeat of mental ſight
That Adam, now enforc'd to ſhut his eyes,
Sunk down, and all his ſpirits became entranc'd. Milton.

By this way of analyſis we may proceed from compounds to ingredients, and from motions to the forces producing them; and in general, from effects to their cauſes, and from particular cauſes to more general ones, till the argument end in the more general. Newton.

I have often wondered, that learning is not thought a proper ingredient in the education of a woman of quality or fortune. Addiſon.

To INO'CULATE. v. a. [inoculo, in and oculus, Latin.]

1. To propagate any plant by inſerting its bud into another ſtock; to practiſe inoculation. See INOCULATION.

Nor are the ways alike in all
How to ingraff, how to innoculate. May.

Now is the ſeaſon for the budding of the orange-tree: inoculate therefore at the commencement of this month. Evelyn.

But various are the ways to change the ſtate,
To plant, to bud, to graft, to inoculate. Dryden.

2. To yield a bud to another ſtock.

Virtue cannot ſo inoculate our old ſtock, but we ſhall reliſh of it. Shakeſpeare.

Thy ſtock is too much out of date,
For tender plants t' inoculate. Cleaveland.

Where lilies, in a lovely brown,
Inoculate carnation. Cleaveland.

INOCULA'TION. n. ſ. [inoculatio, Lat. from inoculate.]

1. Inoculation is practiſed upon all ſorts of ſtone fruit, and upon oranges and jaſmines. In order to perform it, be provided with a ſharp pen-knife, having a flat haft, and ſome ſound baſs-mat. Having taken off the cuttings from the trees you would propagate, chuſe a ſmooth part of the ſtock; then with your knife make an horizontal cut croſs the rind of the ſtock, and from the middle of that cut make a ſlit downwards about two inches in length in the form of a T; but be careful not to cut too deep, leſt you wound the ſtock: then having cut off the leaf from the bud, leaving the foot-ſtalk remaining, make a croſs cut about half an inch below the eye, and with your knife ſlit off the bud, with part of the wood to it. This done, with your knife pull off that part of the wood which was taken with the bud, obſerving whether the eye of the bud be left to it or not; for all theſe buds which loſe their eyes in ſtripping are good for nothing: then raiſing the bark of the ſtock with the flat haft of your pen-knife clear to the wood, thruſt the bud therein, placing it ſmooth between the rind and the wood of the ſtock, cutting off any part of the rind belonging to the bud which may be too long; and ſo having exactly fitted the bud to the ſtock, tie them cloſely round with baſs-mat, beginning at the under part of the ſlit, and ſo proceed to the top, taking care not to bind round the eye of the bud. The March following cut off the ſtock three inches above the bud, ſloping it, that the wet may paſs off: to this part of the ſtock, above the bud, faſten the ſhoot which proceeds from the bud, and which would be in danger of being blown out; but this muſt continue no longer than one year, after which it muſt be cut off cloſe above the bud, that the ſtock may be covered thereby. Miller.

In the ſtem of Elaiana they all met, and came to be ingrafted all upon one ſtock, moſt of them by inoculation. Howel.

2. The practice of tranſplanting the ſmall pox, by infuſion of the matter from ripened puſtules into the veins of the uninfected, in hopes of procuring a milder ſort than what frequently comes by infection. Quincy.

It is evident, by inoculation, that the ſmalleſt quantity of the matter, mixed with the blood, produceth the diſeaſe. Arbuth.

INOCULA'TOR. n. ſ. [from inoculate.]

1. One that practiſes the inoculation of trees.

2. One who propagates the ſmall-pox by inoculation

Itself instinct with spirit, but convoy'd
By four cherubick shapes. Milton.

I'NSTINCT. n. s. [instinct, Fr. instinctus, Lat. This word had its accent formerly on the last syllable.] Desire or aversion acting in the mind without the intervention of reason or deliberation; the power determining the will of brutes.

In him they fear your highness' death;
And mere instinct of love and loyalty
Makes them thus forward in his banishment. Shakespeare.

Thou knowest I am as valiant as Hercules; but beware instinct; the lion will not touch the true prince: instinct is a great matter. I was a coward on instinct: I shall think the better of myself and thee, during my life; I for a valiant lion, and thee for a true prince. Shakespeare.

But providence or instinct of nature seems,
Or reason though disturb'd, and scarce consulted,
To have guided me aright. Milton.

Nature first pointed out my Portius to me,
And easily taught me by her secret force
To love thy person, e'er I knew thy merit;
Till what was instinct grew up into friendship. Addison.

The philosopher avers,
That reason guides our deed, and instinct theirs.
Instinct and reason how shall we divide? Prior.

That strong Circean liquor cease t' infuse,
Wherewith thou didst intoxicate my youth. Denham.

What part of wild fury was there in the bacchanals which we have not seen equall'd, if not exceeded by some intoxicated zealots? Decay of Piety.

Others, after having done fine things, yet spoil them by endeavouring to make them better; and are so intoxicated with an earnest desire of being above all others, that they suffer themselves to be deceived. Dryden.

Vegetables by fermentation are wrought up to spirituous liquors, having quite different qualities from the plant itself; for no fruit taken crude has the intoxicating quality of wine. Arbuth.

INTOXICA'TION. n. s. [from intoxicate.] Inebriation; ebriety; the act of making drunk; the state of being drunk.

That king, being in amity with him, did so burn in hatred towards him, as to drink of the lees and dregs of Perkin's intoxication, who was every where else detected. Bacon.

Whence can this proceed, but from that besotting intoxication which verbal magick brings upon the mind. South.

INTRA'CTABLE. adj. [intractabilis, Lat. intraitable, Fr.]

1. Ungovernable; violent; stubborn; obstinate.

To love them who love us is so natural a passion, that even the most intractable tempers obey its force. Rogers.

2. Unmanageable; furious.

By what means serpents, and other noxious and more intractable kinds, as well as the more innocent and useful, got together. Woodward.

INTRA'CTABLENESS. n. s. [from intractable.] Obstinacy; perverseness.

INTRA'CTABLY. adv. [from intractable.] Unmanageably; stubbornly.

INTRANQUI'LITY. n. s. [in and tranquility.] Unquietness; want of rest.

Jactations were used for amusement, and allay in constant pains, and to relieve that intranquility which makes men impatient of lying in their beds. Temple.

INTRA'NSITIVE. adj. [intransitivus, Latin.]

[In grammar.] A verb intransitive is that which signifies an action, not conceived as having an effect upon any object; as, curro, I run. Clarke.

INTRANSMU'TABLE. adj. [in and transmutable.] Unchangeable to any other substance.

Some of the most experienced chemists do affirm quicksilver to be intransmutable, and therefore call it liquor æternus. Ray.

To INTRE'ASURE. v. a. [in and treasure.] To lay up as in a treasure.

There is a history in all mens lives,
Figuring the nature of the times deceas'd;
The which observ'd, a man may prophesy,
With a near aim, of the main chance of things
As yet not come to life, which in their seeds
And weak beginnings he intreasured. Shakespeare.

To INTRE'NCH. v. a. [in and trancher, French.]

1. To invade; to encroach; to cut off part of what belongs to another.

Little I desire my sceptre should intrench on God's sovereignty, which is the only king of men's consciences. K. Charles.

That crawling insect, who from mud began,
Warm'd by my beams, and kindled into man!
Durst he, who does but for my pleasure live,
Intrench on love, my great prerogative. Dryden.

We are not to intrench upon truth in any conversation, but least of all with children. Locke.

2. To break with hollows.

His face
Deep scars of thunder had intrench'd, and care
Sat on his faded cheek. Milton.

3. To fortify with a trench: as, the allies were intrenched in their camp.

INTRE'NCHANT. adj. [This word, which is, I believe, found only in Shakespeare, is thus explained by one of his editors: The intrenchant air means the air which suddenly encroaches and closes upon the space left by any body which had passed through it. Hanmer. I believe Shakespeare intended rather to express the idea of indivisibility or invulnerableness, and derived intrenchant, from in privative, and trencher, to cut; intrenchant is indeed properly not cutting, rather than not to be cut; but this is not the only instance in which Shakespeare confounds words of active and passive signification.] Not to be divided; not to be wounded; indivisible.

As easy may'st thou the intrenchant air
With thy keen sword impress, as make me bleed. Shakesp.

INTRE'NCHMENT. n. s. [from intrench.] Fortification with a trench.

INTRE'PID. adj. [intrepide, Fr. intrepidus, Latin.] Fearless; daring; bold; brave.

Argyle
Calm and intrepid in the very throat
Of sulphurous war, on Tenier's dreadful field. Thomson.

INTREPI'DITY. n. s. [intrepidité, Fr.] Fearlessness; courage; boldness.

I could not sufficiently wonder at the intrepidity of these diminutive mortals, who durst venture to walk upon my body, without trembling. Swift.

INTRE'PIDLY. adv. [from intrepid.] Fearlessly; boldly; dauntingly.

He takes the globe for the scene; he launches forward intrepidly, like one to whom no place is new. Pope.

INTRICACY. n. s. [from intricate.] State of being entangled; perplexity; involution; complication of facts or notions.

The part of Ulysses in Homer's Odyssey is much admired by Aristotle, as perplexing that fable with very agreeable plots and intricacies, by the many adventures in his voyage, and the subtilty of his behaviour. Addison.

INTRICATE. adj. [intricatus, Lat.] Entangled; perplexed; involved; complicated; obscure.

Much of that we are to speak may seem to a number perhaps tedious, perhaps obscure, dark, and intricate. Hooker.

His style in writing was fit to convey the most intricate business to the understanding with the utmost clearness. Addison.

To INTRICATE. v. a. [from the adjective.] To perplex; to darken. Not proper, nor in use.

Alterations of surnames have so intricated, or rather obscured, the truth of our pedigrees, that it will be no little hard labour to deduce them. Camden.

INTRICATELY. adv. [from intricate.] With involution of one in another; with perplexity.

That variety of factions, into which we are so intricately engaged, gave occasion to this discourse. Swift.

INTRICATENESS. n. s. [from intricate.] Perplexity; involution; obscurity:

He found such intricateness that he could see no way to lead him out of the maze. Sidney.

INTRI'GUE. n. s. [intrigue, French.]

1. A plot; a private transaction in which many parties are engaged: usually an affair of love.

These are the grand intrigues of man,
These his huge thoughts, and these his vast desires. Flatm.

A young fellow long made love, with much artifice and intrigue, to a rich widow. Addison.

The hero of a comedy is represented victorious in all his intrigues. Swift.

Now love is dwindled to intrigue,
And marriage grown a money league. Swift.

2. Intricacy; complication. Little in use.

Though this vicinity of ourselves to ourselves cannot give us the full prospect of all the intrigues of our nature, yet we have much more advantage to know ourselves, than to know other things without us. Hale.

3. The complication or perplexity of a fable or poem; artful involution of feigned transaction.

As these causes are the beginning of the action, the opposite designs against that of the hero are the middle of it, and form that difficulty or intrigue which makes up the greatest part of the poem. Pope.

To INTRI'GUE. v. n. [intriguer, Fr. from the noun.] To form plots; to carry on private designs.

INTRI'GUER. n. s. [intrigueur, Fr. from intrigue.] One who busies himself in private transactions; one who forms plots; one who pursues women.

I desire that intriguers will not make a pimp of my lion, and convey their thoughts to one another. Addison.

INTRI'GUINGLY. adv. [from intrigue.] With intrigue; with secret plotting.

INTRI'NSECAL. adj. [intrinsecus, Lat. intrinseque, French. This word is now generally written intrinsical, contrarily to etymology.]

1. Internal; solid; natural; not accidental; not merely apparent.

These measure the laws of God not by the intrinsecal goodness and equity of them, but by reluctancy and opposition which they find in their own hearts against them. Tillotson.

The near and intrinsecal, and convincing argument of the being of God, is from human nature itself. Bentley.

2. Intimate; closely familiar. Out of use.

He falls into intrinsecal society with Sir John Graham, who dissuaded him from marriage, and gave him rather encouragement to woo fortune in court. Wotton.

Sir Fulk Greville was a man in appearance intrinsecal with him, or at least admitted to his melancholy hours. Wotton.

INTRI'N-

INTRI'NSECALLY. adv. [from intrinsecal.]

1. Internally; naturally; really.

A lye is a thing absolutely and intrinsecally evil. South.

Every one of his pieces is an ingot of gold, intrinsecally and solidly valuable. Prior.

2. Within; at the inside.

In his countenance no open alteration; but the less he shewed without, the more it wrought intrinsecally. Wotton.

If once bereaved of motion, it cannot of itself acquire it again; nor till it be thrust by some other body from without, or intrinsecally moved by an immaterial self-active substance that can pervade it. Bentley.

INTRI'NSICK. adj. [intrinsecus, Latin.]

1. Inward; internal; real; true.

Intrinsick goodness consists in accordance, and sin in contrariety to the secret will of God, as well as to his revealed. Hammond.

2. Not depending on accident; fixed in the nature of the thing.

The difference between worth and merit, strictly taken; that is, a man's intrinsick; this, his current value. Grew.

His fame, like gold, the more 'tis try'd,
The more shall its intrinsick worth proclaim. Prior.

Beautiful as a jewel set in gold, which, though it adds little to intrinsick value, yet improves the lustre, and attracts the eyes of the beholder. Rogers.

INTRI'NSECATE. adj. [This word seems to have been ignorantly formed between intricate and intrinsecal] Perplexed; entangled.

Such smiling rogues as these,
Like rats, oft bite the holy cords in twain
Too intrinsecate t' unloose. Shakespeare.

Come, mortal wretch,
With thy sharp teeth this knot intrinsicate
Of life at once untie. Shakespeare.

To INTRODU'CE. v. a. [introduco, Lat. introduire, Fr.]

1. To conduct or usher into a place, or to a person.

Mathematicians of advanced speculations may have other ways to introduce into their minds ideas of infinity. Locke.

2. To bring something into notice or practice.

This vulgar error whosoever is able to reclaim, he shall introduce a new way of cure, preserving by theory as well as practice. Brown.

An author who should introduce a sport of words upon the stage, would meet with small applause. Broome.

3. To produce; to give occasion.

Whatsoever introduces habits in children, deserves the care and attention of their governors. Locke.

4. To bring into writing or discourse by proper preparatives.

INTRODU'CER. n. s. [introducteur, Fr. from introduce.]

1. One who conducts another to a place or person.

2. Any one who brings any thing into practice or notice.

The beginning of the Earl of Essex I must attribute to my lord of Leicester; but yet as an introducer or supporter, not as a teacher. Wotton.

It is commonly charged upon the army, that the beastly vice of drinking to excess, hath been lately, from their example, restored among us; but whoever the introducers were, they have succeeded to a miracle. Swift.

INTRODU'CTION. n. s. [introduction, Fr. introductio, Latin.]

1. The act of conducting or ushering to any place or person; the state of being ushered or conducted.

2. The act of bringing any new thing into notice or practice.

The archbishop of Canterbury had pursued the introduction of the liturgy and the canons into Scotland with great vehemence. Clarendon.

3. The preface or part of a book containing previous matter.

INTRODU'CTIVE. adj. [introductif, French; from introduce.] Serving as the means to something else.

The truths of Christ crucified, is the Christian's philosophy, and a good life is the Christian's logick; that great instrumental introductive art, that must guide the mind into the former. South.

INTRODU'CTORY. adj. [from introductus, Latin.] Previous; serving as a means to something further.

This introductory discourse itself is to be but an essay, not a book. Boyle.

INTROGRE'SSION. n. s. [introgressio, Latin.] Entrance; the act of entering.

INTRO'IT. n. s. [introit, French.] The beginning of the mass; the beginning of publick devotions.

INTROMI'SSION. n. s. [intromissio, Latin.]

1. The act of sending in.

If sight be caused by intromission, or receiving in the form of that which is seen, contrary species or forms should be received confusedly together, which Aristotle shews to be absurd. Peacham.

All the reason that I could ever hear alleged by the chief factors for a general intromission of all sects and persuasions into our communion, is, that those who separate from us are stiff and obstinate, and will not submit to the rules of our church, and that therefore they should be taken away. South.

2. [In the Scottish law.] The act of intermeddling with another's effects: as, he shall be brought to an account for his intromissions with such an estate.

To INTROMIT. v. a. [intromitto, Latin.] To send in, to let in; to admit; to allow to enter; to be the medium by which any thing enters.

Glass in the window intromits light without cold to chill the room. Hooke.

Tinged bodies and liquors reflect some sort of rays and intromit or transmit other sorts. Newton.

To INTROSPE'CT. v. a. [introspectus, Latin.] To take a view of the inside.

INTROSPE'CTION. n. s. [from introspect.] A view of the inside.

The actings of the mind or imagination itself, by way of reflection or introspection of themselves, are discovered by man. Hale.

I was forced to make an introspection into my own mind, and into that idea of beauty which I have formed in my imagination. Dryden.

INTROVENIENT. adj. [intro and venio, Latin.] Entering; coming in.

Scarce any condition which is not exhausted and changed from the commixture of introvenient nations, either by commerce or conquest. Brown.

To INTRU'DE. v. n. [intrudo, Latin.]

1. To come in unwelcome by a kind of violence; to enter without invitation or permission.

Thy years want wit, thy wit wants edge
And manners, to intrude where I am graced. Shakesp.

The Jewish religion was yet in possession; and that it might so enter, as not to intrude, it was to bring its warrant from the same hand of omnipotence. Addison.

Forgive me, fair one, if officious friendship
Intrudes on your repose, and comes thus late
To greet you with the tidings of success. Rowe.

Some thoughts rise and intrude upon us, while we shun them; others fly from us, when we would hold them. Watts.

2. To encroach; to force in uncalled or unpermitted.

Let no man beguile you of your reward, in a voluntary humility, and worshipping of angels, intruding into those things which he hath not seen by his fleshly mind. Colossians.

To INTRU'DE. v. a. To force without right or welcome.

Not to intrude one's self into the mysteries of government, which the prince keeps secret, is represented by the wiseacre up in a bull-hide, which the companions of Ulysses would needs be so foolish as to pry into. Pope.

INTRU'DER. n. s. [from intrude.] One who forces himself into company or affairs without right or welcome.

And the hounds
Should drive upon the new transformed limbs,
Unmannerly intruder as thou art! Shakespeare.

Go, base intruder! over-weening slave!
Bestow thy fawning smiles on equal mates. Shakespeare.

They were but intruders upon the possession, during the minority of the heir: they knew those lands were the rightful inheritance of that young lady. Locke.

Will you, a bold intruder, never learn
To know your basket, and your bread discern? Dryden.

She had seen a great variety of faces: they were all strangers and intruders, such as she had no acquaintance with. Locke.

The whole fraternity of writers rise up in arms against every new intruder into the world of fame. Addison.

INTRU'SION. n. s. [intrusion, French; intrusio, Latin]

1. The act of thrusting or forcing any thing or person into a place or state.

It must raise more substantial superstructions, and add upon very many excellent strains, which have been justled off by the intrusions of poetical fictions. Brown.

The separation of the parts of one body, upon the impulse of another, and the change from rest to motion upon impulse, and the like, seem to have some connection. Locke.

2. Encroachment upon any person or place; unwelcome entrance; entrance without invitation or permission.

I think myself in better plight for a lender than you are, the which hath something emboldened me to this unfeatured intrusion; for they say, if money go before, all ways do lie open. Shakespeare.

Frogs, lice, and flies, must all his palace fill
With loath'd intrusion. Milton.

How's this, my son? Why this intrusion?
Were not my orders that I should be private? Addison.

I may close, after so long an intrusion upon your meditations. Watts.

3. Voluntary and uncalled undertaking of any thing.

It will be said, I handle an art no way suitable either to my employment or fortune, and so stand charged with intrusion and impertinency. Wotton.

To INTRU'ST. v. a. [in and trust.] To treat with confidence; to charge with any secret commission, or thing of value.

Never

His majesty had a solicitous care for the payment of his debts; though in such a manner that none of the duke's officers were intrusted with the knowledge of it. Clarendon.

Receive my counsel, and securely move;
Intrust thy fortune to the pow'rs above. Dryden.

Are not the lives of those, who draw the sword
In Rome's defence, intrusted to our care? Addison.

He composed his billet doux, and at the time appointed went to intrust it to the hands of his confidant. Arbuthnot.

INTUITION. n. s. [intuitus, intuer, Latin.]

1. Sight of any thing; immediate knowledge. Used commonly of mental view.

At our rate of judging, St. Paul had surely passed for a most malicious persecutor; whereas God saw he did it ignorantly in unbelief, and upon that intuition had mercy on him. Government of the Tongue.

The truth of these propositions we know by a bare simple intuition of the ideas, and such propositions are called self-evident. Locke.

2. Knowledge not obtained by deduction of reason, but instantaneously accompanying the ideas which are its object.

All knowledge of causes is deductive; for we know none by simple intuition, but through the mediation of their effects; for the casuality itself is insensible. Glanville.

Discourse was then almost as quick as intuition. South.

He their single virtues did survey,
By intuition in his own large breast. Dryden.

INTUITIVE. adj. [intuitivus, low Latin; intuitif, French.]

1. Seen by the mind immediately without the intervention of reason.

Immediate perception of the agreement or disagreement of two ideas, is when, by comparing them together in our minds, we see their agreement or disagreement; this therefore is called intuitive knowledge. Locke.

Those lofty flights of thought, and almost intuitive perception of abstruse notions, those exalted discoveries of mathematical theorems, we sometimes see existent in one and the same person. Bentley.

2. Seeing, not barely believing.

Faith, beginning here with a weak apprehension of things not seen, endeth with the intuitive vision of God in the world to come. Hooker.

3. Having the power of discovering truth immediately without ratiocination.

The rule of ghostly or immaterial natures, as spirits and angels, is their intuitive intellectual judgment, concerning the amiable beauty and high goodness of that object, which, with unspeakable joy and delight, doth set them on work. Hooker.

The soul receives
Discursive or intuitive. Milton.

INTUITIVELY. adv. [intuitivement, French.] Without deduction of reason; by immediate perception.

That our love is sound and sincere, that it cometh from a pure heart, and a good conscience, and a faith unfeigned, who can pronounce, saving only the searcher of all mens hearts, who alone intuitively doth know in this kind who are his. Hook.

God Almighty, who sees all things intuitively, does not want logical helps. Baker.

INTUMESCENCE. } n. s. [intumescence, French; intumesco, Lat.]
INTUMESCENCY. } Swell; tumour; the act or state of swelling.

According to the temper of the terreous parts at the bottom, as they are more hardly or easily moved, they variously begin, continue, or end their intumescencies. Brown.

This subterranean heat causes a great rarefaction and intumescence of the water of the abyss, putting it into very great commotions, and at the same time making the like effort upon the earth, occasions an earthquake. Woodward.

INTURGESCENCE. n. s. [in and turgesco, Latin.] Swelling; the act or state of swelling.

Not by attenuation of the upper part of the sea, but inturgescencies caused first at the bottom, and carrying the upper part of it before them. Brown.

INTUSE. n. s. [intusus, Latin.] Bruise. Spenser.

To INTWINE. v. a. [in and twine.]

1. To twist, or wreath together.

This opinion, though false, yet intwined with a true, that the souls of men do never perish, abated the fear of death in them. Hooker.

2. To incompass by circling round it.

The vest and veil divine,
Which wand'ring foliage and rich flow'rs intwine. Dryden.

To INVA'DE. v. a. [invado, Latin.]

1. To attack a country; to make an hostile entrance.

He will invade them with troops. Hab.

Should he invade any part of their country, he would soon see that nation up in arms. Knolles.

With dang'rous expedition they invade
Heav'n, whose high walls fear no assault. Milton.

Thy race in times to come
Shall spread the conquests of imperial Rome;
Rome, whose ascending tow'rs shall heav'n invade,
Involving earth and ocean in her shade. Dryden.

Encouraged with success, he invades the province of philosophy. Dryden.

In vain did nature's wise command
Divide the waters from the land,
If daring ships, and men prophane,
Invade th' inviolable main. Dryden.

2. To attack; to assail; to assault.

There shall be fedit on among men, and invading one another; they shall not regard their kings. 2 Esdras.

Then think'st 'tis much, that this contentious storm
Invades us to the skin; so 'tis to thee:
But where the greater malady is fix'd,
The lesser is scarce felt. Shakespeare.

3. To violate with the first act of hostility; to attack, not defend.

Your foes are such, as they, not you, have made;
And virtue may repel, though not invade. Dryden.

INVADER. n. s. [from invado, Latin.]

1. One who enters with hostility into the possessions of another.

The breath of Scotland the Spaniards could not endure; neither durst they, as invaders, land in Ireland. Bacon.

Their piety
In sharp contest of battle found no aid
Against invaders. Milton.

That knowledge, like the coal from the altar, serves only to embroil and consume the sacrilegious invaders. Dec. of Piety.

Were he lost, the naked empire
Would be a prey expos'd to all invaders. Denham.

The country about Attica was the most barren of any in Greece, through which means it happened that the natives were never expelled by the fury of invaders. Swift.

Secure, by William's care, let Britain stand;
Nor dread the bold invader's hand. Prior.

Esteem and judgment with strong fancy join,
To call the fair invader in;
My darling favourite inclination, too,
All, all conspiring with the foe. Granville.

2. An assailant.

3. Encroacher; intruder.

The substance thereof was formerly comprised in that uncompounded style, but afterwards prudently enlarged for the repelling and preventing heretical invaders. Hammond.

INVALESCENCE. n. s. [invalesco, Latin.] Strength; health; force. Dict.

INVALID. adj. [invalide, Fr. invalidus, Latin.] Weak; of no weight or cogency.

But this I urge,
Admitting motion in the heav'ns, to shew
Invalid, that which thee to doubt it mov'd. Milton.

To INVALIDATE. v. a. [from invalid.] To weaken; to deprive of force or efficacy.

To invalidate such a consequence, some things might be speciously enough alledged. Boyle.

Tell a man, passionately in love, that he is jilted, bring a score of witnesses of the falshood of his mistress, and it is ten to one but three kind words of her's shall invalidate all their testimonies. Locke.

INVALID. n. s. [Fr.] One disabled by sickness or hurts.

What beggar in the invalides,
With lameness broke, with blindness smitten,
Wish'd ever decently to die? Prior.

INVALIDITY. n. s. [in and validity; invalidité, French.]

1. Weakness; want of cogency.

2. Want of bodily strength. This is no English meaning.

He ordered, that none who could work should be idle; and that none who could not work, by age, sickness, or invalidity, should want. Temple.

INVALUABLE. adj. [in and valuable.] Precious above estimation; inestimable.

The faith it produced would not be so free an act as it ought, to which are annexed all the glorious and invaluable privileges of believing. Atterbury.

INVARIABLE. adj. [in and variarus, Lat. invariabile, Fr.] Unchangeable; constant.

Being not able to design times by days, months, or years, they thought best to determine these alterations by some known and invariable signs, and such did they conceive the rising and setting of the fixed stars. Brown.

The rule of good and evil would not then appear uniform and invariable, but would seem different, according to mens different complexions and inclinations. Atterbury.

INVARIABLENESS. n. s. [from invariable.] Immutability; constancy.

INVARIABLY. adv. [from invariable.] Unchangeably; constantly.

He, who steers his course invariably by this rule, takes the surest way to make all men praise him. Atterbury.

INVASION. n. s. [invasion, French; invasio, Latin.]

1. Hostile entrance upon the rights or possessions of another; hostile encroachment.

We made an invasion upon the Cherethites. 1 Samu. l.

I N V

Reaſon finds a ſecret grief and remorſe from every invaſion that ſin makes upon innocence, and that muſt render the firſt entrance and admiſſion of ſin uneaſy. South.

The nations of th' Auſonian ſhore
Shall hear the dreadful rumour, from afar,
Of arm'd invaſion, and embrace the war. Dryden.

William the Conqueror invaded England about the year 1060, which means this; that taking the duration from our Saviour's time till now, for one intire length of time, it ſhews at what diſtance this invaſion was from the two extremes. Locke.

2. Attack of an epidemical diſeaſe.

What demonſtrates the plague to be endemial to Egypt, is its invaſion and going off at certain ſeaſons. Arbuthnot.

INVA'SIVE. adj. [from invade.] Entering hoſtilely upon other mens poſſeſſions; not defenſive.

I muſt come cloſer to my purpoſe, and not make more invaſive wars abroad, when, like Hannibal, I am called back to the defence of my country. Dryden.

Let other monarchs, with invaſive bands,
Leſſen their people, and extend their lands;
By gaſping nations hated and obey'd,
Lords of the deſarts that their ſwords had made. Arbuthnot.

INVE'CTIVE. n. ſ. [invective, Fr. invectiva, low Lat.] A cenſure in ſpeech or writing; a reproachful accuſation.

Plain men deſiring to ſerve God as they ought, but being not ſo ſkilful as to unwind themſelves, where the ſnares of gloſing ſpeech do lie to entangle them, are in mind not a little troubled, when they hear ſo bitter invectives againſt that which this church hath taught them to reverence as holy, to approve as lawful, and to obſerve as behoveful for the exerciſe of Chriſtian duty. Hooker.

So deſp'rate thieves, all hopeleſs of their lives,
Breathe out invectives 'gainſt the officers. Shakeſp.

Caſting off the reſpect fit to be continued between kings, even when their blood is hotteſt, he fell to bitter invectives againſt the French king. Bacon.

Whilſt we condemn others, we may indeed be in the wrong; and then all the invectives we make at their ſuppoſed errours, fall back with a rebounded force upon our own real ones. Decay of Piety.

If we take ſatyr, in the general ſignification of the word, for an invective, 'tis certain that 'tis almoſt as old as verſe. Dryden.

INVE'CTIVE. adj. [from the noun.] Satirical; abuſive.

Let him rail on; let his invective muſe
Have four and twenty letters to abuſe. Dryden.

INVE'CTIVELY. adv. Satirically; abuſively.

Thus moſt invectively he pierceth through
The body of the country, city, court,
Yea and of this our life; ſwearing that we
Are meer uſurpers, tyrants. Shakeſpeare.

The wiſe Author of nature hath placed on the rump two glandules, which the bird catches hold upon with her bill, and ſqueezes out an oily liniment, fit for the inunction of the feathers, and cauſing their filaments to cohere. Ray.

INUNDA'TION. n. ſ. [inundation, French; inundatio, Latin.]

1. The overflow of waters; flood; deluge. Inundation, ſays Cowley, implies leſs than deluge.

Her father counts it dangerous,
That ſhe ſhould give her ſorrow ſo much ſway;
And in his wiſdom haſtes our marriage,
To ſtop the inundation of her tears. Shakeſpeare.

The ſame inundation was not paſt forty foot in moſt places; ſo that although it deſtroyed man and beaſt generally, yet ſome few wild inhabitants of the woods eſcaped. Bacon.

All fountains of the deep,
Broke up, ſhall heave the ocean to uſurp
Beyond all bounds, 'till inundation riſe
Above the higheſt hills. Milton.

This inundation unto the Egyptians happeneth when it is winter unto the Ethiopians. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Your care about your banks infers a fear
Of threatning floods, and inundations near. Dryden.

The hero next aſſail'd proud Doway's head,
And ſpite of confluent inundations ſpread
With unexampled valour did ſucceed. Blackmore.

No ſwelling inundation hides the grounds,
But cryſtal currents glide within their bounds. Gay.

2. A confluence of any kind.

Many good towns, through that inundation of the Iriſh, were utterly waſted. Spenſer.

To INVO'CATE. v. a. [invoco, Latin.] To invoke; to implore; to call upon; to pray to.

Poor key-cold figure of a holy king!
Be't lawful, that I invocate thy ghoſt,
To hear the lamentations of poor Anne. Shakeſpeare.

If Dagon be thy god,
Go to his temple, invocate his aid
With ſolemneſt devotion. Milton.

Here rather let me drudge, and earn my bread,
'Till vermin or the draff of ſervile food
Conſume me, and oft invocated death
Haſten the welcome end of all my pains. Milton.

INVOCA'TION. n. ſ. [invocation, French; invocatio, Latin.]

1. The act of calling upon in prayer.

Is not the name of prayer uſual to ſignify even all the ſervice that ever we do unto God? And that for no other cauſe, as I ſuppoſe, but to ſhew that there is in religion no acceptable duty which devout invocation of the name of God doth not either preſuppoſe or infer. Hooker.

2. The form of calling for the aſſiſtance or preſence of any being.

My invocation is
Honeſt and fair, and in his miſtreſs' name. Shakeſpeare.

The propoſition of Gratius is contained in a line, and that of invocation in half a line. Waſe.

I will ſtrain myſelf to breath out this one invocation. Howel.

The whole poem is a prayer to fortune, and the invocation is divided between the two deities. Addiſon.

One death involves
Tyrants and ſlaves. Thomſon.

5. To entangle.

This reference of the name to a thing whereof we have no idea, is ſo far from helping at all, that it only ſerves the more to involve us in difficulties. Locke.

As obſcure and imperfect ideas often involve our reaſon, ſo do dubious words puzzle mens reaſon. Locke.

6. To complicate; to make intricate.

Some involv'd their ſnaky folds. Milton.

Syllogiſm is of neceſſary uſe, even to the lovers of truth, to ſhew them the fallacies that are often concealed in florid, witty, or involved diſcourſes. Locke.

7. To blend; to mingle together confuſedly.

Earth with hell mingle and involve. Milton.

INVO'LUNTARILY. adv. [from involuntary.] Not by choice; not ſpontaneouſly.

INVO'LUNTARY. adj. [in and voluntarius, Latin; involontaire, French.]

1. Not having the power of choice.

The gath'ring number, as it moves along,
Involves a vaſt involuntary throng,
Who gently drawn, and ſtruggling leſs and leſs,
Roll in her vortex, and her pow'r confeſs. Dunciad.

2. Not choſen; not done willingly.

The forbearance of that action, conſequent to ſuch command of the mind, is called voluntary; and whatſoever action is performed without ſuch a thought of the mind, is called involuntary. Locke.

But why? ah tell me, ah too dear!
Steals down my cheek the involuntary tear. Pope.

Revolving in his alter'd ſoul
The various turns of chance below;
And now and then a ſigh he ſtole,
And tears began to flow. Dryden.

2. It has ſometimes of before the object.
With two fair eyes his miſtreſs burns his breaſt;
He looks and languiſhes, and leaves his reſt:
Forſakes his food, and, pining for the laſs,
Is joyleſs of the grove, and ſpurns the growing graſs. Dryd.

3. Giving no pleaſure.
A joyleſs, diſmal, black, and ſorrowful iſſue:
Here is the babe, as loathſome as a toad. Shakeſp.
Here love his golden ſhafts employs; here lights
His conſtant lamp, and waves his purple wings;
Reigns here, and revels: not in the bought ſmiles
Of harlots, loveleſs, joyleſs, unendear'd,
Caſual fruition. Milton.
The pure in heart ſhall ſee God; and if any others could ſo invade this their incloſure, as to take heaven by violence, it ſurely would be a very joyleſs poſſeſſion. Decay of Piety.
He forgets his ſleep, and loaths his food,
That youth, and health, and war are joyleſs to him. Addiſon.

JO'YOUS. adj. [joyeux, French.]

Their fleecy charge, and joyous drink her wave. Prior.

2. Giving joy.
They all as glad as birds of joyous prime,
Thence led her forth, about her dancing round. Spenſer.

3. It has of ſometimes before the cauſe of joy.
Round our death-bed ev'ry friend ſhould run,
And joyous of our conqueſt early won;
While the malicious world with envious tears
Should grudge our happy end, and wiſh it theirs. Dryd.

IPECACUA'NHA. n. ſ. [An Indian plant.]
Ipecacuanha is a ſmall irregularly contorted root, rough, denſe, and firm. One ſort is of a duſky greyiſh colour on the ſurface, and of a paler grey when broken, which is brought from Peru: the other ſort is a ſmaller root, reſembling the former; but it is of a deep duſky brown, or blackiſh colour on the outſide, and white when broken, brought from the Braſils. The grey ought to be preferred in medicinal uſe, becauſe the brown, being ſtronger, is apt to operate more roughly. Ipecacuanha was in the middle of the laſt century firſt brought into Europe, and became celebrated for the cure of dyſenteries, a virtue diſcovered in it by the Indians; but after a few years it ſunk into oblivion, being given in too large doſes. Hill's Mat. Med.

IRA'SCIBLE. adj. [iraſcibilis, low Latin; iraſcible, French.] Partaking of the nature of anger.
The iraſcible paſſions follow the temper of the heart, and the concupiſcible diſtractions the craſis of the liver. Brown.
I know more than one inſtance of iraſcible paſſions ſubdued by a vegetable diet. Arbuthnot.
We are here in the country ſurrounded with bleſſings and pleaſures, without any occaſion of exerciſing our iraſcible faculties. Digby to Pope.

IRE. n. ſ. [Fr. ira, Latin.] Anger; rage; paſſionate hatred.
She lik'd not his deſire;
Fain would be free, but dreaded parents ire. Sidney.
If I digg'd up thy forefathers graves,
And hung their rotten coffins up in chains,
It could not ſlake mine ire, nor eaſe my heart. Shakeſp.
Or Neptune's ire, or Juno's that ſo long
Perplex'd the Greek and Cytherea's ſon. Milton.
The ſentence, from thy head remov'd, may light
On me, ſole cauſe to thee of all this woe;
Me! me! only juſt object of his ire. Milton.
For this th' avenging pow'r employs his darts,
And empties all his quiver in our hearts;
Thus will perſiſt, relentleſs in his ire,
'Till the fair ſlave be render'd to her ſire. Dryden.

IRE'FUL. adj. [ire and full.] Angry; raging; furious.
The ireful baſtard Orleans, that drew blood
From thee, my boy, I ſoon encounter'd. Shakeſp.
By many hands your father was ſubdu'd;
But only ſlaughter'd by the ireful arm
Of unrelenting Clifford. Shakeſp.
There learn'd this maid of arms the ireful guiſe. Fairfax.
In midſt of all the dome misfortune ſat,
And gloomy diſcontent and fell debate,
And madneſs laughing in his ireful mood. Dryden.

IREFULLY. adv. [from ire.] With ire; in an angry manner.

3. The circle round the pupil of the eye.

4. The flower-de-luce.
Iris all hues, roſes, and jeſſamine. Milton.

To IRK. v. a. [yrk, work, Iſlandick.] This word is uſed only imperſonally, it irks me; mihi pœnæ eſt, it gives me pain; or, I am weary of it. Thus the authors of the Accidence ſay, tædet, it irketh.
Come, ſhall we go and kill us veniſon?
And yet it irks me, the poor dappled fools
Should, in their own confines, with forked heads,
Have their round haunches gor'd. Shakeſp.
It irks his heart he cannot be reveng'd. Shakeſp.

IRKSOME. adj. [from irk.] Weariſome; tedious; troubleſome; toilſome; tireſome; unpleaſing.
I know ſhe is an irkſome brawling ſcold. Shakeſp.
Since that thou can'ſt talk of love ſo well,
Thy company, which erſt was irkſome to me,
I will endure. Shakeſpeare.
Where he may likelieſt find
Truce to his reſtleſs thoughts, and entertain
The irkſome hours, 'till his great chief return. Milton.
For not to irkſome toil, but to delight
He made us, and delight to reaſon join'd. Milton.
There is nothing ſo irkſome as general diſcourſes, eſpecially when they turn chiefly upon words. Addiſon.
Frequent appeals from hence have been very irkſome to that illuſtrious body. Swift.

IRKSOMELY. adv. [from irkſome.] Weariſomely; tediouſly.

IRKSOMENESS. n. ſ. [from irkſome.] Tediouſneſs; weariſomeneſs.

IRON. n. ſ. [haiarn, Welſh; ıpenn, ıren, Saxon; iorn, Erſe.]

1. A metal common to all parts of the world, plentiful in moſt, and of a ſmall price, though ſuperior in real value to the deareſt. Though the lighteſt of all metals, except tin, it is conſiderably the hardeſt; and, when pure, naturally malleable, but in a leſs degree than gold, ſilver, lead, or copper: when wrought into ſteel, or when in the impure ſtate from its firſt fuſion, in which it is called caſt iron, it is ſcarce malleable; and the moſt ductile iron, heated and ſuddenly quenched in cold water, loſes much of this quality. Iron is more capable of ruſt than any other metal, is very ſonorous, and requires the ſtrongeſt fire of all the metals to melt it, and is with difficulty amalgamated with mercury. Moſt of the other metals are brittle, while they are hot; but this is moſt malleable as it approaches neareſt to fuſion. It conſiſts of a vitriolick ſalt, a vitrifiable earth, and a peculiar bituminous matter. The ſpecifick gravity of iron is to water as 7632 is to 1000. It is the only known ſubſtance that is attracted by the loadſtone. Iron is not only ſoluble in all the ſtronger acids, but even in common water. Pure iron has been found in ſome places, but very rarely. Iron has greater medicinal virtues than any of the other metals. Hill.
Nor airleſs dungeon, nor ſtrong links of iron,
Can be retentive to the ſtrength of ſpirit. Shakeſp.
If he ſmite him with an inſtrument of iron, ſo that he die, he is a murderer. Numbers.
The power of drawing iron is one of the ideas of a loadſtone, and a power to be ſo drawn is a part of that of iron. Locke.
In a piece of iron ore, of a ferruginous colour, are ſeveral thin plates, placed parallel to each other. Woodward.
There are incredible quantities of iron ſlag in various parts of the foreſt of Dean. Woodward.
Iron ſtone lies in ſtrata. Woodward.
I treated of making iron work, and ſteel work in general. Moxon's Mech. Exer.

2. Any inſtrument or utenſil made of iron: as, a flat iron, box iron, or ſmoothing iron.
Irons of a doit, doublets that hangmen would
Bury with thoſe that wore them, theſe baſe ſlaves,
Ere yet the fight be done, pack up. Shakeſp.
O Thou! whoſe captain I account myſelf,
Look on my forces with a gracious eye:
Put in their hands thy bruiſing irons of wrath,
That they may cruſh down with a heavy fall
Th' uſurping helmets of our adverſaries. Shakeſp.
His feet they hurt with fetters: he was laid in irons. Pſalms.
Can'ſt thou fill his ſkin with barbed irons, or his head with fiſh-ſpears? Job.
For this your locks in paper-durance bound?
For this with tort'ring irons wreath'd around? Pope.

3. Chain; ſhackle; manacle: as, he was put in irons.
The iron entered into his ſoul. Pſalms. Common Prayer.

I'RON. adj.

1. Made of iron.

In iron walls they deem'd me not ſecure. Shakeſp.

Get me an iron crow, and bring it ſtraight
Unto my cell. Shakeſpeare.

Some are of an iron red, ſhining, and polite; others not polite, but as if powdered with iron duſt. Woodward.

Poll-cats and weeſels do a great deal of injury to warrens: the way of taking them is in hutches, and iron traps. Mortim.

2. Reſembling iron in colour.

A piece of ſtone of a dark iron grey colour, but in ſome parts of a ferruginous colour. Woodward.

Some of them are of an iron red, and very bright. Woodw.

3. Harſh; ſevere; rigid; miſerable; calamitous: as, the iron age, for an age of hardſhip and wickedneſs. Theſe ideas may be found more or leſs in all the following examples.

Three vigorous virgins, waiting ſtill behind,
Aſſiſt the throne of th' iron ſcepter'd king. Craſhaw.

O ſad virgin, that thy power
Might bid the ſoul of Orpheus ſing
Such notes as warbled to the ſtring,
Drew iron tears from Pluto's cheek,
And made hell grant what love did ſeek. Milton.

In all my iron years of wars and dangers,
From blooming youth down to decaying age,
My fame ne'er knew a ſtain of diſhonour. Rowe.

Jove cruſh the nations with an iron rod,
And ev'ry monarch be the ſcourge of God. Pope.

4. Indiſſoluble; unbroken.

Raſh Elpenor, in an evil hour,
Dry'd an immeaſurable bowl, and thought
T' exhale his ſurfeit by irriguous ſleep,
Imprudent: him death's iron ſleep oppreſt. Philips.

5. Hard; impenetrable.

I will converſe with iron witted fools,
And unreſpective boys: none are for me,
That look into me with conſid'rate eyes. Shakeſp.

To I'RON. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To ſmooth with an iron.
2. To ſhackle with irons.

IRO'NICAL. adj. [ironique, Fr. from irony.] Expreſſing one thing and meaning another; ſpeaking by contraries.

In this fallacy may be compriſed all ironical miſtakes, or expreſſions receiving inverted ſignifications. Brown.

I take all your ironical civilities in a literal ſenſe, and ſhall expect them to be literally performed. Swift.

IRO'NICALLY. adv. [from ironical.] By the uſe of irony.

Socrates was pronounced by the oracle of Delphos to be the wiſeſt man of Greece, which he would turn from himſelf ironically, ſaying, there could be nothing in him to verify the oracle, except this, that he was not wiſe, and knew it; and others were not wiſe, and knew it not. Bacon.

The dean ironically grave,
Still ſhunn'd the fool, and laſh'd the knave. Swift.

IRONMO'NGER. n. ſ. [iron and monger.] A dealer in iron.

I'RONWOOD. n. ſ. A kind of wood extremely hard, and ſo ponderous as to ſink in water. It grows in America. Rob. Cruſo.

I'RONWORT. n. ſ. [ſideritis, Latin.] It is a plant with a labiated flower, conſiſting of one leaf, whoſe upper lip or beard is divided into three parts: out of the flower-cup riſes the pointal, attended, as it were, by four embryoes; which afterward turn to ſo many oblong ſeeds, ſhut up in an huſk, which before was the flower-cup: to theſe marks muſt be added, the flowers growing in whorles at the wings of the leaves, which are cut like a creſt, and differ from the other leaves of the plant. Mill.

I'RONY. adj. [from iron.] Made of iron; partaking of iron.

The force they are under is real, and that of their fate but imaginary: it is not ſtrange if the irony chains have more ſolidity than the contemplative. Hammond.

Some ſprings of Hungary, highly impregnated with vitriolick ſalts, diſſolve the body of one metal, ſuppoſe iron, put into the ſpring; and depoſite, in lieu of the irony particles carried off, coppery particles. Woodward.

IRONY. n. ſ. [ironie, Fr. εἰρωνεία.] A mode of ſpeech in which the meaning is contrary to the words: as, Bolingbroke was a holy man.

So grave a body, upon ſo ſolemn an occaſion, ſhould not deal in irony, or explain their meaning by contraries. Swift.

IRRA'DIANCE. } n. ſ. [irradiance, French; irradio, Latin.]
IRRA'DIANCY. }

1. Emiſſion of rays or beams of light upon any object.

The principal affection is its tranſlucency; the irradiancy and ſparkling, found in many gems, is not diſcoverable in this. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

2. Beams of light emitted.

Love not the heav'nly ſpirits? Or do they mix
Irradiance! virtual, or immediate touch? Milton.

To IRRA'DIATE. v. a. [irradio, Latin.]

1. To adorn with light emitted upon it; to brighten.

When he thus perceives that theſe opacous bodies do not hinder the eye from judging light to have an equal plenary diffuſion through the whole place it irradiates, he can have no difficulty to allow air, that is diaphanous, to be every where mingled with light. Digby.

It is not a converting but a crowning grace; ſuch an one as irradiates and puts a circle of glory about the head of him upon whom it deſcends. South.

2. To enlighten intellectually; to illumine; to illuminate.

Celeſtial light
Shine inward, and the mind through all her pow'rs
Irradiate; there plant eyes: all miſt from thence Purge and diſperſe. Milt n.

IRRE'SOLUTE. adj. [irreſolu, Fr. in and reſolute.] Not conſtant in purpoſe; not determined.

Were he evil us'd, he would outgo
His father, by as much as a performance
Does an irreſolute purpoſe. Shakeſpeare.

Him, after long debate, irreſolute
Of thoughts revolv'd, his final ſentence choſe
Fit veſſel, fitteſt imp of fraud, in whom
To enter. Milton.

To make reflections upon what is paſt, is the part of ingenious but irreſolute men. Temple.

So Myrrah's mind, impell'd on either ſide,
Takes ev'ry bent, but cannot long abide;
Irreſolute on which ſhe ſhould rely,
At laſt unfix'd in all, is only fix'd to die. Dryden.

IRRE'SOLUTELY. adv. [from irreſolute.] Without firmneſs of mind; without determined purpoſe.

IRRESOLU'TION. n. ſ. [irreſolution, Fr. in and reſolution.] Want of firmneſs of mind.

It hath moſt force upon things that have the lighteſt motion, and therefore upon the ſpirits of men, and in them upon ſuch affections as move lighteſt; as upon men in fear, or men in irreſolution. Bacon.

Irreſolution on the ſchemes of life, which offer themſelves to our choice, and inconſtancy in purſuing them, are the greateſt cauſes of all our unhappineſs. Addiſon.

IRRESPE'CTIVE. adj. [in and reſpective.] Having no regard to any circumſtances.

Thus did the Jew, by perſuading himſelf of his particular irreſpective election, think it ſafe to run into all foul ſins. Hammond on Fundamentals.

According to this doctrine, it muſt be reſolved wholly into the abſolute irreſpective will of God. Rogers.

IRRESPE'CTIVELY. adv. [from irreſpective.] Without regard to circumſtances.

He is convinced, that all the promiſes belong to him abſolutely and irreſpectively. Hammond.

IRRETRIE'VABLE. adj. [in and retrieve.] Not to be repaired; irrecoverable; irreparable.

IRRETRIE'VABLY. adv. [from irretrievable.] Irreparably; irrecoverably.

It would not defray the charge of the extraction, and therefore muſt have been all irretrievably loſt, and uſeleſs to mankind, was it not by this means collected. Woodward.

IRRE'VERENCE. n. ſ. [irreverentia, Lat. irreverence, Fr. in and reverence.]

1. Want of reverence; want of veneration; want of reſpect.

Having ſeen our ſcandalous irreverence towards God's worſhip in general, 'tis eaſy to make application to the ſeveral parts of it. Decay of Piety.

They were a ſort of attributes, with which it was a matter of religion to ſalute them on all occaſions, and which it was an irreverence to omit. Pope.

2. State of being diſregarded.

The concurrence of the houſe of peers in that fury, can be imputed to no one thing more than to the irreverence and ſcorn the judges were juſtly in, who had been always looked upon there as the oracles of the law. Clarendon.

IRRE'VERENT. adj. [irreverent, Fr. in and reverent.] Not paying due homage or reverence; not expreſſing or conceiving due veneration or reſpect.

As our fear excludeth not that boldneſs which becometh ſaints, ſo, if our familiarity with God do not ſavour of fear, it draweth too near that irreverent confidence where[illegible] humility can never ſtand.

Knowledge men ſought for, and covered it ſ[illegible] ſort as jewels of ineſtimable price, fearing the [illegible] ſtruction of the ignorant and irreligious.

Witneſs the irreverent ſon [illegible]
Of him who built the ark; who, for the ſhame
Done to his father, heard his heavy curſe,
Servant of ſervants, on his vicious race.

Swearing, and the irreverent uſing the name of God in common diſcourſe, is another abuſe of the tongue. [illegible]

If an irreverent expreſſion or thought too wanton ſhould creep into my verſes, through my inadvertency, let that [illegible] be anſwerable for them.

IRRE'VERENTLY. adv. [from irreverent.] Without due reſpect or veneration.

'Tis but an ill eſſay of reverence and godly fear [illegible] goſpel irreverently.

IRREVE'RSIBLE. adj. [in and reverſe.] Not to be recalled, [illegible] to be changed.

The ſins of his chamber and his cloſet ſhall be proclaimed before men and angels, and an eternal irreverſible ſentence pronounced.

IRREVE'RSIBLY. adv. [from irreverſible.] Without [illegible]

The title of fundamentals, being ordinarily confined to doctrines of faith, hath occaſioned that great reproach to the church, at which ſo many myriads of ſubtilians have ſtumbled, and fallen irreverſibly, by conceiving heaven a reward of true opinions.

IRREVO'CABLE. adj. [irrevocabilis, Latin; irrevocable, Fr.] Not to be recalled; not to be brought back; not to be reverſed.

Give thy hand to Warwick,
And, with thy hand, thy faith irrevocable,
That only Warwick's daughter ſhall be thine.

Firm and irrevocable is my doom,
Which I have paſt upon her.

That which is paſt is gone and irrevocable, therefore [illegible] do but triſle that labour in paſt matters.

The ſecond, both for piety renown'd,
And puiſſant deeds, a promiſe ſhall receive
Irrevocable, that his regal throne
For ever ſhall endure.

By her irrevocable fate,
War ſhall the country waſte and change the ſtate.

The other victor flame a moment ſtood,
Then fell, and lifeleſs left th' extinguiſh'd wood;
For ever loſt, th' irrevocable light
Forſook the black'ning coals, and ſunk to night.

Each ſacred accent bears eternal weight,
And each irrevocable word is fate.

IRRE'VOCABLY. adv. [from irrevocable.] Without recall.

If air were kept out four or five minutes, the fire would be irrevocably extinguiſhed.

To IRRIGATE. v. a. [irrigo, Latin.] To wet; to moiſten, to water.

The heart, which is one of the principal parts of the [illegible] doth continually irrigate, nouriſh, keep hot, and ſupple the [illegible] members.

A bulky charger near their lips,
With which, in often interrupted ſleep,
Their frying blood compels to irrigate
Their dry furr'd tongues.

IRRIGA'TION. n. ſ. [from irrigate.] The act of watering; moiſtening.

Help of ground is by watering and irrigation.

2. It is likewiſe ſometimes the termination of a gentile or poſſeſſive adjective: as, Swediſh, Daniſh; the Daniſh territories, or territories of the Danes.
3. It likewiſe notes participation of the qualities of the ſubſtantive to which it is added: as fool, fooliſh; man, manniſh; rogue, roguiſh.

I'SICLE. n. ſ. [More properly icicle, from ice; but ice ſhould rather be written iſe; ıꝼꝼ, Saxon.] A pendent ſhoot of ice.

Do you know this lady?
——The moon of Rome; chaſte as the iſicle
That's curdled by the froſt from pureſt ſnow
Hanging on Dian's temple. Shakeſpeare.

The froſts and ſnows her tender body ſpare;
Thoſe are not limbs for iſicles to tear. Dryden.

ISINGLA'SS. n. ſ. [from ice, or iſe, and glaſs; that is, matter congealed into glaſs; ichthyocolla, Latin.]

Iſinglaſs is a tough, firm, and light ſubſtance, of a whitiſh colour, and in ſome degree tranſparent, much reſembling glue, but cleanlier and ſweeter. We uſually receive it in twiſted pieces, of a roundiſh figure like a ſtaple, which the druggiſts divide into thin ſhreds like ſkins, that eaſily diſſolve. The fiſh from which iſinglaſs is prepared is one of the cartilaginous kind, and a ſpecies of ſturgeon: it grows to eighteen and twenty feet in length, and in its general figure greatly reſembles the ſturgeon. It is frequent in the Danube, the Boriſthenes, the Volga, and many other of the larger rivers of Europe. From the inteſtines of this fiſh the iſinglaſs is prepared by boiling. The greateſt quantity of iſinglaſs is made in Ruſſia. It is an excellent agglutinant and ſtrengthener, and often preſcribed in gellies and broths. The wine-coopers find it efficacious for clearing wines. Hill.

The cure of putrefaction requires an incraſſating diet, as all viſcid broths, hartſhorn, ivory, and iſinglaſs. Floyer.

Some make it clear by reiterated fermentations, and others by additions, as iſinglaſs. Mortimer.

I'SINGLASS Stone. n. ſ. This is a foſſil which is one of the pureſt and ſimpleſt of the natural bodies. It is found in broad maſſes, compoſed of a multitude of extremely thin plates or flakes. The maſſes are of a browniſh or reddiſh colour; but when the plates are ſeparated, they are perfectly colourleſs, and more bright and pellucid than the fineſt glaſs. It is found in Muſcovy, Perſia, the iſland of Cyprus, in the Alps and Appennines, and the mountains of Germany. The ancients made their windows of it, inſtead of glaſs. It is alſo ſometimes uſed for glaſs before pictures, and for horn in lanthorns. Hill.

ISLAND. n. ſ. [inſula, Latin; iſola, Italian; eoland, Erſe. It is pronouced iland.] A tract of land ſurrounded by water.

He will carry this iſland home in his pocket, and give it his ſon for an apple.——And ſowing the kernels of it in the ſea, bring forth more iſlands. Shakeſpeare.

Within a long receſs there lies a bay,
An iſland ſhades it from the rolling ſea,
And forms a port. Dryden.

Some ſafer world in depth of woods embrac'd,
Some happier iſland in the wat'ry waſte. Johnſon.

Iſland of bliſs! amid' the ſubject ſeas. Thomſon.

I'SLANDER. n. ſ. [from iſland. Pronounce ilander.] An inhabitant of a country ſurrounded by water.

We, as all iſlanders, are lunares, or the moon's men. Camd.

Your dinner, and the generous iſlanders
By you invited, do attend your preſence. Shakeſpeare.

There are many bitter ſayings againſt iſlanders in general, repreſenting them as fierce, treacherous, and unhoſpitable: thoſe who live on the continent have ſuch frequent intercourſe with men of different religions and languages, that they become more kind than thoſe who are the inhabitants of an iſland. Addiſon.

A race of rugged mariners are theſe,
Unpoliſh'd men, and boiſt'rous as their ſeas;
The native iſlanders alone their care,
And hateful he that breathes a foreign air. Pope.

ISLE. n. ſ. [iſle, French; inſula, Latin. Pronounce ile.]

1. An iſland; a country ſurrounded by water.

Is it not an eaſy matter
To make lord William Haſtings of our mind,
For the inſtalment of this noble duke
In the ſeat royal of this famous iſle? Shakeſpeare.

The dreadful fight
Betwixt a nation and two whales I write:
Seas ſtain'd with gore I ſing, advent'rous toil,
And how theſe monſters did diſarm an iſle. Waller.

2. [Written, I think, corruptly for aile, from aiſle, French, from ala, Latin, the aile being probably at firſt only a wing or ſide walk. It may come likewiſe from allee, French, a walk.] A long walk in a church, or publick building.

O'er the twilight groves and duſky caves,
Long ſounding iſles and intermingled graves,
Black melancholy ſits. Pope.

2. Exit; egreſs; or paſſage out.

Unto the Lord belong the iſſues from death. Pſalms.

Keep thy heart with all diligence; for out of it are the iſſues of life. Proverbs.

Let us examine what bodies touch a moveable whilſt in motion, as the only means to find an iſſue out of this difficulty. Digby on Bodies.

We might have eaſily prevented thoſe great returns of money to France; and if it be true the French are ſo impoveriſhed, in what condition muſt they have been, if that iſſue of wealth had been ſtopped? Swift.

3. Event; conſequence.

Spirits are not finely touch'd,
But to fine iſſues. Shakeſpeare.

If I were ever fearful
To do a thing, where I the iſſue doubted,
Whereof the execution did cry out
Againſt the non-performance, 'twas a fear
Which oft infects the wiſeſt. Shakeſpeare.

But let the iſſue correſpondent prove
To good beginnings of each enterprize. Fairfax.

If things were caſt upon this iſſue, that God ſhould never prevent ſin 'till man deſerved it, the beſt would ſin, and ſin for ever. South.

The wittieſt ſayings and ſentences will be found the iſſues of chance, and nothing elſe but ſo many lucky hits of a roving fancy. South.

Our preſent condition is better for us in the iſſue, than that uninterrupted health and ſecurity that the atheiſt deſires. Bentley.

4. Termi-

4. Termination; concluſion.

He hath preſerved Argalus alive, under pretence of having him publickly executed after theſe wars, of which they hope for a ſoon and proſperous iſſue. Sidney.

What iſſue of my love remains for me!
How wild a paſſion works within my breaſt!
With what prodigious flames am I poſſeſt! Dryden.

Homer, at a loſs to bring difficult matters to an iſſue, lays his hero aſleep, and this ſolves the difficulty. Broome.

5. Sequel deduced from premiſes.

I am to pray you not to ſtrain my ſpeech
To groſſer iſſues, nor to larger reach,
Than to ſuſpicion. Shakeſpeare.

8. Progeny; offſpring.

O nation miſerable!
When ſhalt thou ſee thy wholſome days again?
Since that the trueſt iſſue of thy throne,
By his own interdiction ſtands accurſt. Shakeſpeare.

Nor where Abaſſin kings their iſſue guard,
Mount Amara, though this by ſome ſuppos'd
True paradiſe, under the Æthiop line
By Nilus' head. Milton.

This old peaceful prince, as heav'n decreed,
Was bleſs'd with no male iſſue to ſucceed. Dryden.

The frequent productions of monſters, in all the ſpecies of animals, and ſtrange iſſues of human birth, carry with them difficulties, not poſſible to conſiſt with this hypotheſis. Locke.

9. [In law.] Iſſue hath divers applications in the common law: ſometimes uſed for the children begotten between a man and his wife; ſometimes for profits growing from an amercement, fine or expences of ſuit; ſometime for profits of lands or tenements; ſometime for that point of matter depending in ſuit, whereupon the parties join and put their cauſe to the trial of the jury. Iſſue is either general or ſpecial: general iſſue ſeemeth to be that whereby it is referred to the jury to bring in their verdict, whether the defendant have done any ſuch thing as the plaintiff layeth to his charge. The ſpecial iſſue then muſt be that, where ſpecial matter being alledged by the defendant for his defence, both the parties join thereupon, and ſo grow rather to a demurrer, if it be quæſtio juris, or to trial by the jury, if it be quæſtio facti. Cowel.

To I'SSUE. v. n. [from the noun; iſſer, Fr. uſcire, Italian.]

1. To come out; to paſs out of any place.

Waters iſſued out from under the threſhold of the houſe. Ezek. xlvii. 1.

To I'SSUE. v. a.

1. To ſend out; to ſend forth.

A weak degree of heat is not able either to digeſt the parts or to iſſue the ſpirits. Bacon.

2. To ſend out judicially or authoritatively. This is the more frequent ſenſe.

If the council iſſued out any order againſt them, or if the king ſent a proclamation for their repair to their houſes, ſome nobleman publiſhed a proteſtation. Clarendon.

Deep in a rocky cave he makes abode,
A manſion proper for a mourning god:
Here he gives audience, iſſuing out decrees
To rivers, his dependent deities. Dryden.

In vain the maſter iſſues out commands,
In vain the trembling ſailors ply their hands;
The tempeſt unforeſeen prevents their care. Dryden.

They conſtantly wait in court to make a due return of what they have done, and to receive ſuch other commands as the judge ſhall iſſue forth. Ayliffe.

I'SSUELESS. adj. [from iſſue.] Without offspring; without deſcendants.

The north ſide of the Aſſyrian empire ſtretched northward to that iſthmus between the Euxine and the Caſpian ſeas. Brerewood on Languages.

O life, thou nothing's younger brother!
Thou weak built iſthmus, that do'ſt proudly riſe
Up betwixt two eternities,
Yet can'ſt not wave nor wind ſuſtain;
But broken and o'erwhelm'd the ocean meets again. Cowley.

Our church of England ſtands as Corinth between two ſeas, and there are ſome buſy in cutting the iſthmus, to let in both at once upon it. St Auguſtine.

Cleomenes thinking it more adviſeable to fortify, not the iſthmus, but the mountains, put his deſign in execution. Creech.

Plac'd on this iſthmus of a middle ſtate,
A being darkly wiſe, and rudely great. Pope.

IT. pronoun. [þit, Saxon.]

1. The neutral demonſtrative. Uſed in ſpeaking of things.

Nothing can give that to another which it hath not itſelf. Bramh. againſt Hobbs.

Will our great anger learn to ſtoop ſo low?
I know it cannot. Cowley.

Tell me, O tell, what kind of thing is wit,
Thou who maſter art of it. Cowley.

His ſon, it may be, dreads no harm;
But kindly waits his father's coming home. Flatman.

The time will come, it will, when you ſhall know
The rage of love. Dryden.

How can I ſpeak? or how, ſir, can you hear?
Imagine that which you would moſt deplore,
And that which I would ſpeak, is it or more. Dryden.

A mind ſo furniſhed, what reaſon has it to acquieſce in its concluſions! Locke.

The glory which encompaſſed them covered the place, and darted its rays with ſo much ſtrength, that the whole fabrick began to melt. Addiſon.

If we find a greater good in the preſent conſtitution, than would have accrued either from the total privation of it, or from other frames and ſtructures, we may then reaſonably conclude, that the preſent conſtitution proceeded from an intelligent and good being, that formed it that particular way out of choice. Bentley.

The deſign, it ſeems, is to avoid the dreadful imputation of pedantry. Swift.

2. It is uſed abſolutely for the ſtate of a perſon or affair.

How is it with our general?
——Even ſo
As with a man by his own alms impoiſon'd,
And with his charity ſlain. Shakeſpeare.

3. It is uſed for the thing; the matter; the affair.

It's come to paſs,
That tractable obedience is a ſlave
To each incenſed will. Shakeſpeare.

4. It is ſometimes expreſſed by 't.

He rallied, and again fell to 't;
For catching foe by nearer foot,
He lifted with ſuch might and ſtrength,
As would have hurl'd him thrice his length. Hudibras.

5. It is uſed ludicrouſly after neutral verbs, to give an emphaſis.

If Abraham brought all with him, it is not probable that he meant to walk it back again for his pleaſure. Raleigh.

The Lacedemonians, at the ſtraights of Thermopylæ, when their arms failed them, fought it out with their nails and teeth. Dryden.

I have often ſeen people laviſh it profuſely in tricking up their children, and yet ſtarve their minds. Locke.

A mole courſes it not on the ground, like the rat or mouſe, but lives under the earth. Addiſon.

Whether the charmer ſinner it, or ſaint it,
If folly grows romantick, I muſt paint it. Pope.

6. Sometimes applied familiarly, ludicrouſly, or rudely to perſons.

Let us after him,
Whoſe care is gone before to bid us welcome:
It is a peerleſs kinſman. Shakeſpeare.

Do, child, go to it grandam, child:
Give grandam kingdom, and its grandam will Give it up him. Shakeſpeare.

7. It is ſometimes uſed of the firſt or ſecond perſon, ſometimes of more. This mode of ſpeech, though uſed by good authors, and ſupported by the il y a of the French, has yet an appearance of barbariſm.

Who was't came by?
—'Tis two or three, my lord, that bring you word
Macduff is fled to England. Shakeſpeare.

City,
'Tis I, that made thy widows. Shakeſpeare.

Never did trusty squire with knight,
Or knight with squire, e'er jump more right;
Their arms and equipage did fit,
As well as virtues, parts, and wit. Hudibras.
This shews how perfectly the rump
And commonwealth in nature jump:
For as a fly that goes to bed,
Rests with his tail above his head;
So in this mungrel state of ours,
The rabble are the supreme powers. Hudibras.
Good wits jump, and mine the nimbler of the two. More.
Good now, how your devotions jump with mine. Dryden.
I am happier for finding our judgments jump in the notion. Pope to Swift.

JUMP. adv. Exactly; nicely. Obsolete.
Otherwise one man could not excel another, but all should be either absolutely good, as hitting jump that indivisible point or center wherein goodness consisteth; or else missing it, they should be excluded out of the number of well doers. Hooker.
But since so jump upon this bloody question,
You from the Polack wars, and you from England,
Are here arriv'd. Shakespeare.
Myself the while to draw the Moor apart,
And bring him jump, when he may Cassio find
Soliciting his wife. Shakespeare.

JUMP. n. s. [from the verb.]
1. The act of jumping; a leap; a skip.
The surest way for a learner is, not to advance by jumps and large strides; let that, which he sets himself to learn next, be as nearly conjoined with what he knows already, as is possible. Locke.
2. A lucky chance.
Do not exceed
The prescript of this scrowl: our fortune lies
Upon this jump. Shakespeare.
3. [Jupe, French.] A waistcoat; a kind of loose or limber stays worn by sickly ladies.
The weeping cassock scar'd into a jump,
A sign the presbyter's worn to the stump. Cleaveland.

JU'NCATE. n. s. [juncade, French; gioncata, Italian.]
1. Cheesecake; a kind of sweetmeat of curds and sugar.
2. Any delicacy.
A goodly table of pure ivory,
All spread with juncates, fit to entertain
The greatest prince. Spenser.
With stories told of many a feat,
How fairy Mab the juncates eat. Milton.
3. A furtive or private entertainment. It is now improperly written junket in this sense, which alone remains much in use. See JU'NKET.

JU'NCOUS. adj. [junceus, Lat.] Full of bulrushes.

JU'NCTION. n. s. [jonction, French.] Union; coalition.
Upon the junction of the two corps, our spies discovered a great cloud of dust. Addison.

JU'NCTURE. n. s. [junctura, Latin.]
1. The line at which two things are joined together.
Besides those grosser elements of bodies, salt, sulphur, and mercury, there may be ingredients of a more subtile nature, which being extremely little, may escape unheeded at the junctures of the distillatory vessels, though never so carefully luted. Boyle.
2. Joint; articulation.
She has made the back-bone of several vertebræ, as being less in danger of breaking than if they were all one entire bone without those gristly junctures. More.
All other animals have transverse bodies; and though some do raise themselves upon their hinder legs to an upright posture, yet they cannot endure it long, neither are the figures or junctures, or order of their bones, fitted to such a posture. Hale's Originat. of Mankind.
3. Union; amity.
Nor are the soberest of them so apt for that devotional compliance and juncture of hearts, which I desire to bear in those holy offices to be performed with me. K. Charles.
4. A critical point or article of time.
By this profession in that juncture of time, they bid farewel to all the pleasures of this life. Addison.
When any law does not conduce to the publick safety, but in some extraordinary junctures, the very observation of it would endanger the community, that law ought to be laid asleep. Addison.

JUNE. n. s. [Juin, Fr. Junius, Lat.] The sixth month from January.
June is drawn in a mantle of dark green. Peacham.

JU'NIOR. adj. [junior, Lat.] One younger than another.
The fools my juniors by a year,
Are tortur'd with suspense and fear,
Who wisely thought my age a screen,
When death approach'd to stand between. Swift.
According to the nature of men of years, I was repining at the rise of my juniors, and unequal distribution of wealth. Tatler.

JU'NIPER. n. s. [juniperus, Lat.] A plant.
The leaves of the juniper are long, narrow, and prickly; the male flowers are, in some species, produced at remote distances from the fruit on the same tree; but in other species they are produced on different trees from the fruit: the fruit is a soft pulpy berry, containing three seeds in each. Miller.
Some of our common juniper shrubs are males and some females, of the same species. The male shrubs produce, in April and May, a small kind of juli with apices on them very large, and full of farina; the females produce none of these juli, but only the berries, which do not ripen till the second year, and then do not immediately fall off; so that it is no uncommon thing to see the berries of three different years at once on the same tree. The shrub is very common with us on heaths and barren hills, but the berries used medicinally in our shops are brought from Germany, where it is greatly more abundant. The berries are powerful attenuants, diureticks, and carminative. Hill.
A clyster may be made of the common decoctions, or of mallows, bay, and juniper berries, with oil of linseed. Wiseman.

JUNK. n. s. [probably an Indian word.]
1. A small ship of China.
America, which have now but junks and canoes, abounded then in tall ships. Davies.
2. Pieces of old cables. Ainsw.

JU'NKET. n. s. [properly juncate. See JUNCATE.]

2. A stolen entertainment.

To JU'NKET. v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To feast secretly; to make entertainments by stealth.
Whatever good bits you can pilfer in the day, save them to junket with your fellow servants at night. Swift.
2. To feast.
Job's children junketed and feasted together often, but the reckoning cost them dear at last. Smith.
The apostle would have no revelling or junketing. Smith.

JUNTO. n. s. [Italian.] A cabal; a kind of men combined in any secret design.
Would men have spent toilesome days and watchful nights in the laborious quest of knowledge preparative to this work, at length come and dance attendance for approbation upon a junto of petty tyrants, acted by party and prejudice, who denied fitness from learning, and grace from morality. South.
From this time began an intrigue between his majesty and a junto of ministers, which had like to have ended in my destruction. Gulliver.

I'VORY. n. s. [ivoire, French; ebur, Lat.]
Ivory is a hard, solid, and firm substance, of a fine white colour, and capable of a very good polish: it is the dens ex ertus of the elephant, who carries on each side of his jaws a tooth of six or seven feet in length, of the thickness of a man's thigh at the base, and almost entirely solid; the two sometimes weighing three hundred and thirty pounds: these ivory tusks are hollow from the base to a certain height, and the cavity is filled with a compact medullary substance, seeming to have a great number of glands in it. The finest ivory is brought from the East-Indies, where a great quantity of it is not taken immediately from the head of the animal, but found buried in the earth. The ivory of the islands of Ceylon and of Acham do not become yellow in the wearing as all other ivory does, and it therefore bears a greater price than that of the Guinea coast. The preparations of ivory have the same restorative virtues with those of the hartshorn. Hill.
There is more difference between thy flesh and hers, than between jet and ivory. Shakespeare.
Draw Erato with a sweet and lovely countenance, bearing a heart with an ivory key. Peacham.
From their ivory port the cherubim
Forth issu'd. Milton.
Two gates the silent house of sleep adorn,
Of polish'd iv'ry this, that of transparent horn:
True visions through transparent horn arise,
Through polish'd iv'ry pass deluding lies. Dryden.

JUPPO'N. n. ſ. [juppon, French.] A ſhort cloſe coat.

Some wore a breaſt-plate and a light juppon,
Their horſes cloath'd with rich capariſon. Dryden.

JU'RATORY. adj. [juratoire, Fr. juro, Lat.] Giving an oath.

A contumacious perſon may be compelled to give juratory caution de parendo juri. Ayliffe.

JURI'DICAL. adj. [juridicus, Lat. juridique, Fr.]

1. Acting in the diſtribution of juſtice.
2. Uſed in courts of juſtice.

According to a juridical account and legal ſignification, time within memory, by the ſtatute of Weſtminſter, was ſettled in the beginning of the reign of king Richard the firſt. Hale.

JURI'DICALLY. adv. [from juridical.] With legal authority; according to forms of juſtice.

JU'RISCONSULT. n. ſ. [juris conſultus, Latin.] One who gives his opinion in caſes of law.

There is mention made in a deciſion of the juriſconſult Javolemus, of a Britannick fleet. Arbuthnot.

JURISDI'CTION. n. ſ. [juriſdictio, Lat. juriſdiction, Fr.]

1. Legal authority; extent of power.

Sometimes the practice of ſuch juriſdiction may ſwerve through error even in the very beſt, and for other reſpects, where leſs integrity is. Hooker.

Without the king's aſſent or knowledge,
You wrought to be a legate; by which pow'r
You maim'd the juriſdiction of all biſhops. Shakeſpeare.

All perſons exerciſing eccleſiaſtical juriſdiction ſhould have the king's arms in their ſeals of office. Hayward.

This place exempt
From heav'n's high juriſdiction. Milton.

As Adam had no ſuch power as gave him ſovereign juriſdiction over mankind. Locke.

This cuſtom in a popular ſtate, of impeaching particular men, may ſeem to be nothing elſe but the people's chuſing to exerciſe their own juriſdiction in perſon. Swift.

2. Diſtrict to which any authority extends.

JURISPRU'DENCE. n. ſ. [juriſprudence, Fr. juriſprudentia, Lat.] The ſcience of law.

JU'RIST. n. ſ. [juriſte, Fr. jura, Lat.] A civil lawyer; a man who profeſſes the ſcience of the law; a civilian.

This is not to be meaſured by the principles of juriſts. Bac.

JU'ROR. n. ſ. [juro, Lat.] One that ſerves on the jury.

Were the jurors picked out of choice men, this would be as bad; for the evidence will be as deceitful as the verdict. Spenſer.

I ſhall find your lordſhip judge and juror,
You are ſo merciful, I ſee your end,
'Tis my undoing. Shakeſpeare.

I ſing no harm, good ſooth! to any wight,
Officer, jugler, or juſtice of peace,
Juror, or judge. Donne.

About noon the jurors went together, and becauſe they could not agree, they were ſhut in. Hayward.

JU'RY. n. ſ. [jurata, Lat. juré, Fr.]

Jury, a company of men, as twenty-four or twelve, ſworn to deliver a truth upon ſuch evidence as ſhall be delivered them touching the matter in queſtion. There be three manners of trials in England: one by parliament, another by battle, and the third by aſſiſe or jury. The trial by aſſiſe, be the action civil or criminal, publick or private, perſonal or real, is referred for the fact to a jury, and as they find it, ſo paſſeth the judgment. This jury is uſed not only in circuits of juſtices errant, but alſo in other courts, and matters of office, as, if the eſcheatour make inquiſition in any thing touching his office, he doth it by a jury of inqueſt: if the coroner enquire how a ſubject found dead came to his end, he uſeth an inqueſt: the juſtices of peace in their quarter-ſeſſions, the ſheriff in his county and turn, the bailiff of a hundred, the ſteward of a court-leet or court-baron, if they inquire of any offence, or decide any cauſe between party and party, they do it by the ſame manner: ſo that where it is ſaid, that all things be triable by parliament, battle, or aſſize; aſſize, in this place, is taken for a jury or inqueſt, empanelled upon any cauſe in a court where this kind of trial is uſed. This jury, though it appertain to moſt courts of the common law, yet it is moſt notorious in the half year courts of the juſtices errants, commonly called the great aſſizes, and in the quarter-ſeſſions, and in them it is moſt ordinarily called a jury, and that in civil cauſes; whereas in other courts it is often termed an inqueſt. In the general aſſize, there are uſually many juries, becauſe there be ſtore of cauſes, both civil and criminal, commonly to be tried, whereof one is called the grand jury, and the reſt petit juries. The grand jury conſiſts ordinarily of twenty-four grave and ſubſtantial gentlemen, or ſome of them yeomen, choſen indifferently out of the whole ſhire by the ſheriff, to conſider of all bills of indictment preferred to the court; which they do either approve by writing upon them theſe words, billa vera, or diſallow by writing ignoramus. Such as they do approve, if they touch life and death, are farther referred to another jury to be conſidered of, becauſe the caſe is of ſuch importance; but others of lighter moment are, upon their allowance, without more work, fined by the bench, except the party traverſe the indictment, or challenge it for inſufficiency, or remove the cauſe to a higher court by certiorari; in which two former caſes it is referred to another jury, and in the latter tranſmitted to the higher. Thoſe that paſs upon civil cauſes real, are all, or ſo many as can conveniently be had, of the ſame hundred, where the land or tenement in queſtion doth lie, and four at the leaſt; and they, upon due examination, bring in their verdict either for the demandant or tenant: according unto which, judgment paſſeth afterward in the court where the cauſe firſt began; and the reaſon hereof is, becauſe theſe juſtices of aſſize are, in this caſe, for the eaſe of the countries only to take the verdict of the jury by the virtue of the writ called niſi prius, and ſo return it to the court where the cauſe is depending. Cowell.

The jury, paſſing on the priſoner's life,
May in the ſworn twelve have a thief or two
Guiltier than him they try. Shakeſpeare.

How innocent I was,
His noble jury and foul cauſe can witneſs. Shakeſpeare.

Clodius was acquitted by a corrupt jury, that had palpably taken ſhares of money before they gave up their verdict. Bacon.

JU'RYMAN. n. ſ. [jury and man.] One who is impannelled on a jury.

The hungry judges ſoon the ſentence ſign,
And wretches hang that jurymen may dine. Pope.

No judge was known, upon or off the bench, to uſe the leaſt inſinuation, that might affect the intereſts of any one ſingle juryman, much leſs of a whole jury. Swift.

JU'RYMAST. n. ſ. So the ſeamen call whatever they ſet up in the room of a maſt loſt in a fight, or by a ſtorm; being ſome great yard which they put down into the ſtep of that loſt maſt, faſtening it into the partners, and fitting to it the miſſen or ſome leſſer yard with ſails and ropes, and with it make a hard ſhift to ſail. Harris.

JUST. adj. [juſte, Fr. juſtus, Latin.]

1. Upright; incorrupt; equitable in the diſtribution of juſtice.

Take it, while yet 'tis praiſe, before my rage
Unſafely juſt, break looſe on this bad age. Dryden.

2. Honeſt; without crime in dealing with others.

Juſt balances, juſt weights, and a juſt ephah. Lev. xix.

Men are commonly ſo juſt to virtue and goodneſs, as to praiſe it in others, even when they do not practiſe it themſelves. Tillotſon.

Juſt of thy word, in ev'ry thought ſincere,
Who knew no wiſh but what the world might hear. Pope.

3. Exact; proper; accurate.

Boileau's numbers are excellent, his expreſſions noble, his thoughts juſt, his language pure, his ſatire pointed, and his ſenſe cloſe. Dryden.

Theſe ſcenes were wrought,
Embelliſh'd with good morals and juſt thought. Granville.

Juſt precepts thus from great examples giv'n,
She drew from them what they deriv'd from heav'n. Pope.

Juſt to the tale, as preſent at the fray,
Or taught the labours of the dreadful way. Pope.

Once on a time, La Mancha's knight, they ſay,
A certain bard encount'ring on the way,
Diſcours'd in terms as juſt, with looks as ſage,
As e'er could Dennis of the laws o' th' ſtage. Pope.

Though the ſyllogiſm be irregular, yet the inferences are juſt and true. Watts.

4. Virtuous; innocent; pure.

Noah was a juſt man, and perfect. Gen. vi. 9.
How ſhould man be juſt with God? Job ix. 2.
A juſt man falleth ſeven times and riſeth. Prov. xxiv. 16.
He ſhall be recompenſed at the reſurrection of the juſt. Mat. xiv. 14.

The juſt th' unjuſt to ſerve. Milton.

5. True; not forged; not falſely imputed; well grounded.

Crimes were laid to his charge too many, the leaſt whereof being juſt, had bereaved him of eſtimation and credit. Hooker.

Me though juſt right
Did firſt create your leader. Milton.

6. Equally retributed.

He received a juſt recompence of reward. Heb. ii. 2.
Whoſe damnation is juſt. Rom. iii. 8.

As Heſiod ſings, ſpread water o'er thy fields,
And a moſt juſt and glad increaſe it yields. Denham.

7. Complete without ſuperfluity or defect.

He was a comely perſonage, a little above juſt ſtature, well and ſtrait limbed, but ſlender. Bacon.

8. Regular; orderly.

When all
The war ſhall ſtand ranged in its juſt array,
And dreadful pomp; then will I think on thee. Addiſon.

9. Exactly proportioned.

The prince is here at hand: pleaſeth your lordſhip
To meet his grace, juſt diſtance 'twęen our armies? Shak.

10. Full; of full dimenſions.

His ſoldiers had divers ſkirmiſhes with the Numidians, ſo that once the ſkirmiſh was like to have come to a juſt battle. Knolles's Hiſtory of the Turks.

There is not any one particular abovementioned, but would take up the buſineſs of a juſt volume. Hale.

There ſeldom appeared a juſt army in the civil wars. Dutcheſs of Newcaſtle.

11. Exact in retribution.

See nations ſlowly wiſe, and meanly juſt,
To bury'd merit raiſe the tardy buſt. Vanity of Human Wiſhes.

JUST. adv.

1. Exactly; nicely; accurately.

The god Pan guided my hand juſt to the heart of the beaſt. Sidney.

They go about to make us believe that they are juſt of the ſame opinion, and that they only think ſuch cerimonies are not to be uſed when they are unprofitable, or when as good or better may be eſtabliſhed. Hooker.

There, ev'n juſt there he ſtood; and as ſhe ſpoke,
Where laſt the ſpectre was, ſhe caſt her look. Dryden.

A few ſeem to underſtand him right; juſt as when our Saviour ſaid, in an allegorical ſenſe, except ye eat the fleſh of the ſon of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you. Bentley's Sermons.

'Tis with our judgments as our watches, none
Go juſt alike; yet each believes his own. Pope.

2. Merely; barely.

It is the humour of weak and trifling men to value themſelves upon juſt nothing at all. L'Eſtrange.

The nereids ſwam before
To ſmooth the ſeas; a ſoft eteſian gale
But juſt inſpir'd and gently ſwell'd the ſail. Dryden.

Give me, ye gods, the product of one field,
That ſo I neither may be rich nor poor;
And having juſt enough, not covet more. Dryden.

3. Nearly.

Being ſpent with age, and juſt at the point of death, Democritus called for loaves of new bread to be brought, and with the ſteam of them under his noſe prolonged his life. Temple.

JUST. n. ſ. [jouſte, French.] Mock encounter on horſeback; tilt; tournament.

None was either more grateful to the beholders, or more noble in itſelf, than juſts, both with ſword and launce. Sidney.

What news from Oxford? hold thoſe juſts and triumphs? Shakeſpeare.

Among themſelves the tourney they divide,
In equal ſquadrons rang'd on either ſide;
Then turn'd their horſes heads, and man to man,
And ſteed to ſteed oppos'd, the juſts began. Dryden.

To JUST. v. n. [jouſter, French.]

1. To engage in a mock fight; to tilt.
2. To puſh; to drive; to juſtle.

JU'STICE. n. ſ. [juſtice, French; juſtitia, Latin.]

1. The virtue by which we give to every man what is his due.

O that I were judge, I would do juſtice. 2 Sam. xv. 4.

The king-becoming graces,
As juſtice, verity, temp'rance, ſtableneſs,
I have no reliſh of them. Shakeſpeare.

The nature and office of juſtice being to diſpoſe the mind to a conſtant and perpetual readineſs to render to every man his due, it is evident, that if gratitude be a part of juſtice, it muſt be converſant about ſomething that is due to another. Loc.

2. Vindicative retribution; puniſhment.

This ſhews you are above
Yon juſtices, that theſe our nether crimes
So ſpeedily can venge. Shakeſpeare.

He executed the juſtice of the Lord. Deut. xxxiii. 21.

Leſt juſtice overtake us. Iſ. lix. 9.

Examples of juſtice muſt be made, for terror to ſome; examples of mercy, for comfort to others: the one procures fear, and the other love. Bacon.

3. Right; aſſertion of right.

Draw thy ſword,
That if my ſpeech offend a noble heart,
Thy arm may do thee juſtice. Shakeſpeare.

4. [Juſticiarius, Lat.] One deputed by the king to do right by way of judgment. Cowel.

And thou, Eſdras, ordain judges and juſtices, that they may judge in all Syria. 1 Eſdr. viii. 23.

5. JU'STICE of the King's Bench. [juſticiarius de Banquo Regis.] Is a lord by his office, and the chief of the reſt; wherefore he is alſo called capitalis juſticiarius Angliæ. His office eſpecially is to hear and determine all pleas of the crown; that is, ſuch as concern offences committed againſt the crown, dignity, and peace of the king; as treaſons, felonies, mayhems, and ſuch like: but it is come to paſs, that he with his aſſiſtants heareth all perſonal actions, and real alſo, if they be incident to any perſonal action depending before them. Cowel.

Give that whipſter his errand,
He'll take my lord chief juſtice' warrant. Prior.

6. JU'STICE of the Common Pleas. [juſticiarius Communium Placitorum.] Is a lord by his office, and is called dominus juſticiarius communium placitorum. He with his aſſiſtants originally did hear and determine all cauſes at the common law; that is, all civil cauſes between common perſons, as well perſonal as real; for which cauſe it was called the court of common pleas, in oppoſition to the pleas of the crown, or the king's pleas, which are ſpecial, and appertaining to him only. Cowel.

7. JU'STICE of the Foreſt. [juſticiarius Foreſtæ.] Is a lord by his office, and hath the hearing and determining of all offences within the king's foreſt, committed againſt veniſon or vert: of theſe there be two, whereof the one hath juriſdiction over all the foreſts on this ſide Trent, and the other of all beyond. Cowel.

8. JU'STICES of Aſſiſe. [juſticiarii ad capiendas Aſſiſas.] Are ſuch as were wont, by ſpecial commiſſion, to be ſent into this or that county to take aſſiſes; the ground of which polity was the eaſe of the ſubjects: for whereas theſe actions paſs always by jury, ſo many men might not, without great hinderance, be brought to London; and therefore juſtices, for this purpoſe, were by commiſſion particularly authoriſed and ſent down to them. Cowel.

9. JU'STICES in Eyre. [juſticiarii itinerantes.] Are ſo termed of the French erre, iter. The uſe of theſe, in ancient time, was to ſend them with commiſſion into divers counties, to hear ſuch cauſes eſpecially as were termed the pleas of the crown, and therefore I muſt imagine they were ſent abroad for the eaſe of the ſubjects, who muſt elſe have been hurried to the king's bench, if the cauſe were too high for the country court. They differed from the juſtices of Oyer and Terminer, becauſe they were ſent upon ſome one or few eſpecial caſes, and to one place; whereas the juſtices in eyre were ſent through the provinces and countries of the land, with more indefinite and general commiſſion. Cowel.

10. JU'STICES of Gaol Delivery. [juſticiarii ad Gaolas deliberandas.] Are ſuch as are ſent with commiſſion to hear and determine all cauſes appertaining to ſuch as for any offence are caſt into gaol, part of whoſe authority is to puniſh ſuch as let to mainpriſe thoſe priſoners, that by law be not bailable. Theſe by likelihood, in ancient time, were ſent to countries upon ſeveral occaſions; but afterward juſtices of aſſiſe were likewiſe authoriſed to this. Cowel.

11. JU'STICES of Niſi Prius are all one now-a-days with juſtices of aſſiſe; for it is a common adjournment of a cauſe, in the common pleas, to put it off to ſuch a day: niſi prius juſticiarii venerint ad eas partes ad capiendas aſſiſas; and upon this clauſe of adjournment they are called juſtices of niſi prius, as well as juſtices of aſſiſe, by reaſon of the writ or action that they have to deal in. Cowel.

12. JU'STICES of Peace. [juſticiarii ad Pacem.] Are they that are appointed by the king's commiſſion, with others, to attend the peace of the country where they dwell; of whom ſome, upon eſpecial reſpect, are made of the quorum, becauſe ſome buſineſs of importance may not be dealt in without the preſence of them, or one of them. Cowel.

The juſtice,
In fair round belly with good capon lin'd,
With eyes ſevere, and beard of formal cut,
Full of wiſe ſaws, and modern inſtances,
And ſo he plays his part. Shakeſpeare.

Thou haſt appointed juſtices of the peace to call poor men before them, about matters they were not able to anſwer. Shakeſpeare.

The juſtices of peace are of great uſe: anciently they were conſervators of the peace; theſe are the ſame, ſaving that ſeveral acts of parliament have enlarged their juriſdiction. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

I ſing no harm
To officer, juggler, or juſtice of peace. Donne.

To JU'STICE. v. a. [from the noun.] To adminiſter juſtice to any. A word not in uſe.

As for the title of proſcription, wherein the emperor hath been judge and party, and hath juſticed himſelf, God forbid but that it ſhould endure an appeal to a war. Bacon.

Whereas one Styward, a Scot, was apprehended, for intending to poiſon the young queen of Scots, the king delivered him to the French king, to be juſticed by him at his pleaſure. Hayward.

JU'STICEMENT. n. ſ. [from juſtice.] Procedure in courts.

JU'STICER. n. ſ. [from To juſtice.] Adminiſtrator of juſtice. An old word.

He was a ſingular good juſticer; and if he had not died in the ſecond year of his government, was the likelieſt perſon to have reformed the Engliſh colonies. Davies.

JU'STICESHIP. n. ſ. [from juſtice.] Rank or office of juſtice. Swift.

JUSTI'CIABLE. adj. [from juſtice.] Proper to be examined in courts of juſtice.

JU'STIFIABLE.

JU'STIFIABLE. adj. [from juſtify.] Defenſible by law or reaſon; conformable to juſtice.

Juſt are the ways of God,
And juſtifiable to men. Milton.

Although ſome animals in the water do carry a juſtifiable reſemblance to ſome at land, yet are the major part which bear their names unlike. Brown.

JU'STIFIABLENESS. n.ſ. [from juſtifiable.] Rectitude; poſſibility of being fairly defended.

Men, jealous of the juſtifiableneſs of their doings before God, never think they have human ſtrength enough. King Charles.

JU'STIFIABLY. adv. [from juſtifiable.] Rightly; ſo as to be ſupported by right.

A man may more juſtifiably throw croſs and pile for his opinions, than take them up by ſuch meaſures. Locke.

JUSTIFICA'TION. n.ſ. [juſtification, French; juſtificatio, low Latin.]

1. Defence; maintenance; vindication; ſupport; abſolution from guilt.

I hope, for my brother's juſtification, he wrote this but as an eſſay of my virtue. Shakeſp. King Lear.

Among theological arguments, in juſtification of abſolute obedience, was one of a ſingular nature. Swift.

2. Deliverance by pardon from ſins paſt. Clarke.

In ſuch righteouſneſs
To them by faith imputed, they may find
Juſtification towards God, and peace
Of conſcience. Milton.

'Tis the conſummation of that former act of faith by this latter, or, in the words of St. Paul and St. James, the conſummation of faith by charity and good works, that God accepteth in Chriſt to juſtification, and not the bare aptneſs of faith to bring forth works, if thoſe works, by the fault of a rebellious infidel, will not be brought forth. Hammond.

JUSTIFICA'TOR. n.ſ. [from juſtify.] One who ſupports, defends, vindicates, or juſtifies.

JU'STIFIER. n.ſ. [from juſtify.] One who juſtifies; one who defends or abſolves; one who frees from ſin by pardon.

That he might be juſt, and the juſtifier of him which believeth in Jeſus. Romans, iii. 26.

To JU'STIFY. v.a. [juſtifier, French; juſtifico, low Latin.]

1. To clear from imputed guilt; to abſolve from an accuſation.

The law hath judg'd thee, Eleanor;
I cannot juſtify whom law condemns. Shakeſpeare.

They ſay, behold a man gluttonous, a friend of publicans and ſinners; but wiſdom is juſtified of her children. Mat. xi.

How can man be juſtified with God? Or how can he be clean that is born of a woman? Job, xxv. 4.

There is an exquiſite ſubtilty, and the ſame is unjuſt; and there is a wiſe man that juſtifieth in judgment. Eccluſ. x. 25.

You're neither juſtify'd, nor yet accus'd. Dryden.

2. To maintain; to defend; to vindicate.

When we began in courteous manner to lay his unkindneſs unto him, he ſeeing himſelf confronted by ſo many, like a reſolute orator, went not to denial, but to juſtify his cruel falſhood. Sidney.

What ſhe did, whatever in itſelf,
Her doing ſeem'd to juſtify the deed. Milton.

My unwilling flight the gods inforce,
And that muſt juſtify our ſad divorce. Denham.

Yet ſtill thy fools ſhall ſtand in thy defence,
And juſtify their author's want of ſenſe. Dryden.

Let others juſtify their miſſions as they can, we are ſure we can juſtify that of our fathers by an uninterrupted ſucceſſion. Atterbury's Sermons.

3. To free from paſt ſin by pardon.

By him all that believe are juſtified from all things, from which ye could not be juſtified by the law of Moſes. Acts xiii.

To JU'STLE. v.n. [from juſt, jouſter, French.] To encounter; to claſh; to ruſh againſt each other.

While injury of chance
Puts back leave-taking, juſtles roughly by
All time of pauſe, rudely beguiles our lips
Of all rejoindure. Shakeſp. Troilus and Creſſida.

The chariots ſhall rage in the ſtreets, they ſhall juſtle one againſt another in the broad ways. Nah. ii. 4.

Argo paſs'd
Through Boſphorus, betwixt the juſtling rocks. Milton.

Late the clouds
Juſtling, or puſh'd with winds, rude in their ſhock,
Tine the ſlant lightning. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

Not one ſtarry ſpark,
But gods meet gods, and juſtle in the dark. Lee.

Courtiers therefore juſtle for a grant;
And, when they break their friendſhip, plead their want.
Dryden's Knight's Tale.

Murmuring noiſes riſe in every ſtreet;
The more remote run ſtumbling with their fear,
And, in the dark, men juſtle as they meet. Dryden.

When elephant 'gainſt elephant did rear
His trunk, and caſtles juſtled in the air,
My ſword thy way to victory had ſhown. Dryden.

Was there not one who had ſet bars and doors to it, and ſaid hitherto ſhalt thou come, but no farther, and here ſhall thy proud waves be ſtaid; then might we well expect ſuch viciſſitudes, ſuch juſtlings and claſhings in nature. Woodward.

I thought the dean had been too proud
To juſtle here among a crowd. Swift.

To JU'STLE. v.a. To puſh; to drive; to force by ruſhing againſt it.

Private and ſingle abilities ſhould not juſtle out and deprive the church of the joint abilities of many learned and godly men. King Charles.

The ſurly commons ſhall reſpect deny,
And juſtle peerage out with property. Dryden.

It is not to be imagined that the incongruous alphabets and abuſes of writing can ever be juſtled out of their poſſeſſion of all libraries. Holder.

Running in the dark, a man may juſtle a poſt. Collier.

Abſent good, though thought on, not making any part of unhappineſs in its abſence, is juſtled out, to make way for the removal of thoſe uneaſineſſes we feel. Locke.

We juſtled one another out, and diſputed the poſt for a great while. Addiſon's Guardian.

JU'STLY. adv. [from juſt.]

1. Uprightly; honeſtly; in a juſt manner.

Nothing can juſtly be deſpiſed, that cannot juſtly be blamed: where there is no choice, there can be no blame. South.

With ignominy ſcourg'd, in open ſight:
Next view the Tarquin kings; th' avenging ſword
Of Brutus juſtly drawn, and Rome reſtor'd. Dryden.

The goddeſs, ſtudious of her Grecians fate,
Taught them in laws and letters to excel,
In acting juſtly, and in writing well. Prior.

2. Properly; exactly; accurately.

Their artful hands inſtruct the lute to ſound,
Their feet aſſiſt their hands, and juſtly beat the ground. Dryden.

JU'STNESS. n.ſ. [from juſt.]

1. Juſtice; reaſonableneſs; equity. Juſtneſs is properly applied to things, and juſtice to perſons; though we now ſay the juſtice of a cauſe, as well as of a judge.

It maketh unto the right of the war againſt him, whoſe ſucceſs uſeth commonly to be according to the juſtneſs of the cauſe for which it is made. Spenſer.

We may not think the juſtneſs of each act
Such and no other than event doth form it. Shakeſpeare.

2. Accuracy; exactneſs; propriety.

I value the ſatisfaction I had in ſeeing it repreſented with all the juſtneſs and gracefulneſs of action. Dryden.

I appeal to the people, was the uſual ſaying of a very excellent dramatick poet, when he had any diſpute with particular perſons about the juſtneſs and regularity of his productions. Addiſon's Guardian.

To JUT. v.n. [This word is ſuppoſed to be corrupted from jet, perhaps from ſhoot.] To puſh or ſhoot into prominences; to come out beyond the main bulk.

Inſulting tyranny begins to jut
Upon the innocent and awleſs throne. Shakeſpeare.

All the projected or jutting parts ſhould be very moderate, eſpecially the cornices of the lower orders. Wotton.

The land, if not reſtrain'd, had met your way,
Projected out a neck, and jutted to the ſea. Dryden.

A port ſecure for ſhips to ride,
Broke by the jutting land on either ſide;
In double ſtreams the briny waters glide. Dryden.

It ſeems to jut out of the ſtructure of the poem, and be independent of it. Broome's Notes on the Odyſſey.

To JU'TTY. v.a. [from jut.] To ſhoot out beyond.

Then lend the eye a terrible aſpect;
Let it pry through the portage of the head
Like a braſs cannon: let the brow o'erwhelm it
As fearfully, as doth a galled rock
O'erhang and jutty his confounded baſe,
Swill'd with the wild and waſteful ocean. Shakeſpeare.

JU'VENILE. adj. [juvenilis, Latin.] Young; youthful.

Learning hath its infancy, when it is almoſt childiſh; then its youth, when it is luxuriant and juvenile; then its ſtrength of years, when it is ſolid; and laſtly, its old age, when it waxeth dry and exhauſt. Bacon's Eſſays.

JUVENI'LITY. n.ſ. [from juvenile.] Youthfulneſs.

The reſtauration of grey hairs to juvenility, and renewing the exhauſted marrow, may be effected without a miracle. Glanville.

Cuſtomary ſtrains and abſtracted juvenilities have made it difficult to commend and ſpeak credibly in dedications. Glanville.

JU'XTAPOSITION. n. ſ. [juxtapoſition, French; juxta and poſitio, Latin.] Appoſition; the ſtate of being placed by each other.

Nor can it be a difference, that the parts of ſolid bodies are held together by hooks, ſince the coherence of theſe will be of difficult conception; and we muſt either ſuppoſe an infinite number of them holding together, or at laſt come to parts that are united by a mere juxtapoſition. Glanville.

I'VY, n. ſ. [ıꝑıꝛ, Saxon; hedera, Latin.] A plant.

The characters are: it is a paraſitick plant, ſending forth roots or fibres from its branches, by which it is faſtened to either trees, walls, or plants which are near it, and from thence receives a great ſhare of its nouriſhment: the leaves are angular; the flowers, for the moſt part, conſiſt of ſix leaves, and are ſucceeded by round black berries, which grow in round bunches, each of which, for the moſt part, contains four ſeeds. Miller.

A gown made of the fineſt wool;
A belt of ſtraw, and ivy buds,
With coral claſps and amber ſtuds;
And if theſe pleaſures may thee move,
Come live with me and be my love.
Raleigh.

Direct
The claſping ivy where to climb.
Milton.

JY'MOLD. adj. [See GIMAL.]

Their poor jades
Lob down their heads, dropping the hide and hips;
And in their pale dull mouths the jymold bit
Lies, foul with chew'd graſs, ſtill and motionleſs.
Shakeſpeare's Henry V.

K.

K. A letter borrowed by the Engliſh from the Greek alphabet. It has before all the vowels one invariable ſound: as, keen, ken, kill; but is not much in uſe, except after c at the end of words: as, knock, clock, crack, back, brick, ſtick, pluck, check, which were written anciently with e final: as, clocke, checke, tricke. It is alſo in uſe between a vowel and the ſilent e final: as, cloke, broke, breke, pike, duke, eke. It likewiſe ends a word after a diphthong: as, look, break, ſhook, beek. The Engliſh never uſe c at the end of a word. K is ſilent in the preſent pronunciation before n: as, knife, knee, knell.

KA'LENDAR. n. ſ. [now written calendar.] An account of time.

Let this pernicious hour

1. A bird of prey that infeſts the farms, and ſteals the chickens.

Ravenous crows and kites
Fly o'er our heads. Shakeſpeare.

More pity that the eagle ſhould be mew'd,
While kites and buzzards prey at liberty. Shakeſp.

The heron, when ſhe ſoareth high, ſo as ſometimes ſhe is ſeen to paſs over a cloud, ſheweth winds; but kites, flying aloft, ſhew fair and dry weather. Bacon.

A leopard and a cat ſeem to differ juſt as a kite doth from an eagle. Grew.

2. A name of reproach denoting rapacity.

Deteſted kite! thou lieſt. Shakeſpeare.

3. A fictitious bird made of paper.

A man may have a great eſtate conveyed to him; but if he will madly burn, or childiſhly make paper kites of his deeds, he forfeits his title with his evidence. Gov. of the Tongue.

KI'TESFOOT. n. ſ. A plant. Ainſworth.

KI'TTEN. n. ſ. [katteken, Dutch.] A young cat.

That a mare will ſooner drown than an horſe is not experienced, nor is the ſame obſerved in the drowning of whelps and kittens. Brown.

It was ſcratched in playing with a kitten. Wiſeman.

Helen was juſt ſlipt into bed;
Her eyebrows on the toilet lay,
Away the kitten with them fled,
As fees belonging to her prey. Prior.

To KI'TTEN. v. n. [from the noun.] To bring forth young cats.

So it would have done
At the ſame ſeaſon, if your mother's cat
Had kitten'd, though yourſelf had ne'er been born. Shakeſp.

The eagle timbered upon the top of a high oak, and the cat kittened in the hollow trunk of it. L'Eſtrange.

2. In Scotland it denotes to pilfer or ſteal away ſuddenly with a ſnatch.

To KNAB. v. a. [knappen, Dutch; knaap, Erſe.] To bite. Perhaps properly to bite ſomething brittle, that makes a noiſe when it is broken; ſo as that knab and knap may be the ſame.

I had much rather lie knabbing cruſts, without fear, in my own hole, than be miſtreſs of the world with cares. L'Eſtr.

An aſs was wiſhing, in a hard winter, for a little warm weather, and a mouthful of freſh graſs to knab upon. L'Eſtr.

KNACK. n. ſ. [cnec, Welſh, ſly knavery; cnapunge, ſkill, Sax.]

1. A little machine; a petty contrivance; a toy.

When I was young, I was wont
To load my ſhe with knacks: I would have ranſack'd
The pedlar's ſilken treaſury, and have pour'd it
To her acceptance. Shakeſpeare.

For thee, fond boy,
If I may ever know thou do'ſt but ſigh
That thou no more ſhalt ſee this knack, as never
I mean thou ſhalt, we'll bar thee from ſucceſs. Shakeſp.

This cap was moulded on a porringer,
A velvet diſh; fie, fie, 'tis lewd and filthy:
Why 'tis a cockle, or a walnut ſhell,
A knack, a toy, a trick, a baby's cap. Shakeſpeare.

But is't not preſumption to write verſe to you,
Who make the better poems of the two?
For all theſe pretty knacks that you compoſe,
Alas, what are they but poems in proſe! Denham.

He expounded both his pockets,
And found a watch, with rings and lockets;
A copper-plate, with almanacks
Engrav'd upon't, with other knacks. Hudibras.

2. A readineſs; an habitual facility; a lucky dexterity.

I'll teach you the knacks
Of eating of flax
And out of their noſes
Draw ribbands and poſies. Ben. Johnſon.

The knack of faſt and looſe paſſes with fooliſh people for a turn of wit; but they are not aware all this while of the deſperate conſequences of an ill habit. L'Eſtrange.

There is a certain knack in the art of converſation that gives a good grace to many things, by the manner and addreſs of handling them. L'Eſtrange.

Knaves, who in full aſſemblies have the knack
Of turning truth to lies, and white to black. Dryden.

My author has a great knack at remarks: in the end he makes another, about our refining in controverſy, and coming nearer and nearer to the church of Rome. Atterbury.

The dean was famous in his time,
And had a kind of knack at rhime. Swift.

3. A nice trick.

For how ſhould equal colours do the knack?
Chameleons who can paint in white and black? Pope.

To KNACK. v. n. [from the noun.] To make a ſharp quick noiſe, as when a ſtick breaks.

KNA'CKER. n. ſ. [from knack.]

KNAP. n. ſ. [cnap, Welſh, a protuberance, or a broken piece; cnæp, Saxon, a protuberance.] A protuberance; a ſwelling prominence.

You ſhall ſee many fine ſeats ſet upon a knap of ground, environed with higher hills round about it, whereby the heat of the ſun is pent in, and the wind gathereth as in troughs. Bacon.

To KNAP. v. a. [knappen, Dutch.]

1. To bite; to break ſhort.

He knappeth the ſpear in ſunder. Common Prayer.

He will knap the ſpears a-pieces with his teeth. More.

2. [Knaap, Erſe.] To ſtrike ſo as to make a ſharp noiſe like that of breaking.

Knap a pair of tongs ſome depth in a veſſel of water, and you ſhall hear the ſound of the tongs. Bacon.

To KNAP. v. n. To make a ſhort ſharp noiſe.

I reduced ſhoulders ſo ſoon, that the ſtanders-by heard them knap in before they knew they were out. Wiſeman.

To KNA'PPLE. v. n. [from knap.] To break off with a ſharp quick noiſe. Ainſworth.

KNA'PSACK. n. ſ. [from knappen, to eat.] The bag which a ſoldier carries on his back; a bag of proviſions.

The conſtitutions of this church ſhall not be repealed, 'till I ſee more religious motives than ſoldiers carry in their knapſacks. King Charles.

If you are for a merry jaunt, I'll try for once who can foot it fartheſt: there are hedges in ſummer, and barns in winter to be found: I with my knapſack, and you with your bottle at your back: we'll leave honour to madmen, and riches to knaves, and travel 'till we come to the ridge of the world. Dryden's Spaniſh Friar.

KNA'PWEED. n. ſ. [jacea, Latin.]

This is one of the headed plants deſtitute of ſpines: the cup is ſquamoſe; the borders of the leaves are equal, being neither ſerrated nor indented: the florets round the border of the head are barren; but thoſe placed in the center are ſucceeded each by one ſeed, having a down adhering to it. There are fifty ſpecies of this plant, thirteen of which grow wild in England, and the reſt are exoticks. Miller.

KNARE. n. ſ. [knor, German.] A hard knot.

A cake of ſcurf lies baking on the ground,
And prickly ſtubs inſtead of trees are found;
Or woods with knots and knares deform'd and old,
Headleſs the moſt, and hideous to behold. Dryden.

KNAVE. n. ſ. [cnapa, Saxon.]

1. A boy; a male child.
2. A ſervant. Both theſe are obſolete.

For as the moon the eye doth pleaſe
With gentle beams not hurting ſight,
Yet hath ſir ſun the greater praiſe,
Becauſe from him doth come her light;
So if my man muſt praiſes have,
What then muſt I that keep the knave? Sidney.

He eats and drinks with his domeſtick ſlaves;
A verier hind than any of his knaves. Dryden.

3. A petty raſcal; a ſcoundrel; a diſhoneſt fellow.

Moſt men rather brook their being reputed knaves, than for their honeſty be accounted fools; knave, in the mean time, paſſing for a name of credit. South.

When both plaintiff and defendant happen to be crafty knaves, there's equity againſt both. L'Eſtrange.

An honeſt man may take a knave's advice;
But idiots only may be cozen'd twice. Dryden.

See all our fools aſpiring to be knaves. Pope.

4. A card with a ſoldier painted on it.

For 'twill return, and turn t' account,
If we are brought in play upon't,
Or but by caſting knaves get in,
What pow'r can hinder us to win? Hudibras.

KNA'VERY. n. ſ. [from knave.]

1. Diſhoneſty; tricks; petty villainy.

Here's no knavery! See, to beguile the old folks, how the young folks lay their heads together. Shakeſpeare.

If I thought it were not a piece of honeſty to acquaint the king withal, I would do't; I hold it the more knavery to conceal it. Shakeſpeare's Winter's Tale.

Here's the folly of the aſs in truſting the fox, and here's the knavery of the fox in betraying the aſs. L'Eſtrange.

The cunning courtier ſhould be ſlighted too,
Who with dull knavery makes ſo much ado;
'Till the ſhrewd fool, by thriving too too faſt,
Like Æſop's fox, becomes a prey at laſt. Dryden.

2. Miſchievous tricks or practices. In the following paſſage it ſeems a general term for any thing put to an ill uſe, or perhaps for trifling things of more coſt than uſe.

We'll revel it as bravely as the beſt,
With amber bracelets, beads, and all this knav'ry. Shakeſp.

KNA'VISH. adj. [from knave.]

1. Diſhoneſt; wicked; fraudulent.

'Tis fooliſh to conceal it at all, and knaviſh to do it from friends. Pope's Letters.

2. Waggiſh; miſchievous.

Here ſhe comes curſt and ſad;
Cupid is a knaviſh lad,
Thus to make poor females mad. Shakeſpeare.

KNA'VISHLY. adv. [from knaviſh.]

1. Diſhoneſtly; fraudulently.
2. Waggiſhly; miſchievouſly.

To KNEAD. v. a. [cnæban, Saxon; kneden, Dutch.] To beat or mingle any ſtuff or ſubſtance. It is ſeldom applied in popular language but to the act of making bread.

Here's yet in the word hereafter, the kneading, the making of the cakes, and the heating of the oven. Shakeſpeare.

It is a lump, where all beaſts kneaded be;
Wiſdom makes him an ark where all agree. Donne.

Thus kneaded up with milk the new made man
His kingdom o'er his kindred world began;
'Till knowledge miſapply'd, miſunderſtood,
And pride of empire, four'd his balmy blood. Dryden.

One paſte of fleſh on all degrees beſtow'd,
And kneaded up alike with moiſt'ning blood. Dryden.

Prometheus, in the kneading up of the heart, ſeaſoned it with ſome furious particles of the lion. Addiſon.

No man ever reapt his corn,
Or from the oven drew his bread,
Ere hinds and bakers yet were born,
That taught them both to ſow and knead. Prior.

The cake ſhe kneaded was the ſav'ry meat. Prior.

KNE'ADINGTROUGH. n. ſ. [knead and trough.] A trough in which the paſte of bread is worked together.

Frogs ſhall come into thy kneadingtroughs. Exodus.

KNEE. n. ſ. [cneop, Saxon; knee, Dutch.]

1. The joint of the leg where the leg is joined to the thigh.

Thy royal fathe
Was a moſt ſainted king: the queen that bore thee,
Oftener upon her knees than on her feet,
Died every day ſhe liv'd. Shakeſpeare.

I have reſerved to myſelf ſeven thouſand, who have not bowed the knee to Baal. Romans.

Scotch ſkink is a kind of ſtrong nouriſhment, made of the knees and ſinews of beef long boiled. Bacon.

I beg and claſp thy knees. Milton.

Weary'd with length of ways, worn out with toil,
To lay down, and leaning on her knees,
Invok'd the cauſe of all her miſeries;
And caſt her languiſhing regards above,
For help from heav'n, and her ungrateful Jove. Dryden.

Diſdainful of Campania's gentle plains,
When for them ſhe muſt bend the ſervile knee. Thomſon.

2. A knee is a piece of timber growing crooked, and ſo cut that the trunk and branch make an angle. Moxon.

Such diſpoſitions are the fitteſt timber to make great politicks of: like to knee timber, that is good for ſhips that are to be toſſed; but not for building houſes, that ſhall ſtand firm. Bacon.

To KNEE. v. a. [from the noun.] To ſupplicate by kneeling.

Go you that baniſh'd him, a mile before his tent, fall down, and knee the way into his mercy. Shakeſp.

Return with her!
Why, the hot-blooded France, that dow'rleſs took
Our youngeſt born: I could as well be brought
To knee his throne, and ſquire-like penſion beg. Shakeſp.

KNEED. adj. [from knee.]

1. Riſing to the knees.
2. Sunk to the knees.

The country peaſant meditates no harm,
When clad with ſkins of beaſts to keep him warm;
In winter weather unconcern'd he goes,
Almoſt kneedeep, through mire in clumſey ſhoes. Dryden.

KNE'EHOLM. n. ſ. An herb. Ainſworth.

KNE'EPAN. n. ſ. [knee and pan.] A little round bone about two inches broad, pretty thick, a little convex on both ſides, and covered with a ſmooth cartilage on its foreſide. It is ſoft in children, but very hard in thoſe of riper years: it is called patella or mola. Over it paſſes the tendon of the muſcles which extend the leg, to which it ſerves as a pully. Quincy.

The kneepan muſt be ſhewn, with the knitting thereof, by a fine ſhadow underneath the joint. Peacham.

To KNEEL. v. n. [from knee.] To perform the act of genuflection; to bend the knee.

When thou do'ſt aſk me bleſſing, I'll kneel down,
And aſk of thee forgiveneſs. Shakeſpeare.

Ere I was riſen from the place that ſhew'd
My duty kneeling, came a reeking poſt,
Stew'd in his haſte, half breathing, panting forth
From Goneril, his miſtreſs, ſalutation. Shakeſp.

A certain man kneeling down to him, ſaid, Lord, have mercy upon my ſon; for he is lunatick. Matthew.

As ſoon as you are dreſſed, kneel and ſay the Lord's prayer. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.

KNE'ETRIBUTE. n. ſ. [knee and tribute.] Genuflection; worſhip or obeiſance ſhown by kneeling.

Receive from us
Knee-tribute yet unpaid, proſtration vile. Milton.

KNEL. n. ſ. [cnil, Welſh, a funeral pile; cnyllan, to ring, Sax.] The ſound of a bell rung at a funeral.

I would not wiſh them to a fairer death,
And ſo his knell is knoll'd. Shakeſpeare.

Sea nymphs hourly ring his knell:
Hark, now I hear them. Shakeſpeare.

When he was brought again to th' bar, to hear
His knell rung out, his judgment, he was ſtirr'd
With ſuch an agony, he ſweat extremely. Shakeſp.

All theſe motions, which we ſaw,
Are but as ice, which crackles at a thaw:
Or as a lute, which in moiſt weather rings
Her knell alone, by cracking of her ſtrings. Donne.

Unhappy ſlave, and pupil to a bell,
Which his hours work, as well as hours do tell;
Unhappy 'till the laſt, the kind releaſing knell. Cowley.

At dawn poor Stella danc'd and ſung;
The am'rous youth around her bow'd:
At night her fatal knell was rung;
I ſaw, and kiſs'd her in her ſhrowd. Prior.

KNEW. The preterite of know.

KNIFE. n. ſ. plur. knives. [cnif, Sax. kniff, Daniſh.] An inſtrument edged and pointed, wherewith meat is cut, and animals killed.

Come, thick night,
And pall thee in the dunneſt ſmoke of hell,
That my keen knife ſee not the wound it makes. Shakeſp.

Bleſt powers, forbid thy tender life
Should bleed upon a barbarous knife. Craſhaw.

The ſacred prieſts with ready knives bereave
The beaſt of life, and in full bowls receive
The ſtreaming blood. Dryden.

Ev'n in his ſleep he ſtarts, and fears the knife,
And, trembling, in his arms takes his accomplice wife. Dry.

Pain is not in the knife that cuts us; but we call it cutting in the knife, and pain only in ourſelves. Watts.

KNIGHT. n. ſ. [cnihr, Sax. knecht, Germ. a ſervant, or pupil.]

1. A man advanced to a certain degree of military rank. It was anciently the cuſtom to knight every man of rank or fortune, that he might be qualified to give challenges, to fight in the liſts, and to perform feats of arms. In England knighthood confers the title of ſir: as, ſir Thomas, ſir Richard. When the name was not known, it was uſual to ſay ſir knight.

That ſame knight's own ſword this is of yore,
Which Merlin made. Spenſer.

Sir knight, if knight thou be,
Abandon this foreſtalled place. Spenſer.

When every caſe in law is right,
No ſquire in debt, and no poor knight. Shakeſp.

Pardon, goddeſs of the night,
Thoſe that ſlew thy virgin knight;
For the which, with ſongs of woe,
Round about her tomb they go. Shakeſp.

This knight; but yet why ſhould I call him knight,
To give impiety to this rev'rent ſtile. Daniel's Civil War.

No ſquire with knight did better fit
In parts, in manners, and in wit. Hudibras.

2. Among us the order of gentlemen next to the nobility, except the baronets.

The knight intends to make his appearance. Addiſon.

3. A champion.

He ſuddenly unties the poke,
Which out of it ſent ſuch a ſmoke,
As ready was them all to choke,
So grievous was the pother;
So that the knights each other loſt,
And ſtood as ſtill as any poſt. Drayton.

Did I for this my country bring
To help their knight againſt their king,
And raiſe the firſt ſedition? Denham.

KNIGHT Errant. [chevalier errant.] A wandering knight; one who went about in queſt of adventures.

Like a bold knight errant did proclaim
Combat to all, and bore away the dame. Denham.

The ancient errant knights
Won all their miſtreſſes in fights;
They cut whole giants into fritters,
To put them into am'rous twitters. Hudibras.

KNIGHT Errantry. [from knight errant.] The character or manners of wandering knights.

That which with the vulgar paſſes for courage is a brutiſh ſort of knight errantry, ſeeking out needleſs encounters. Norris.

KNIGHT of the Poſt. A hireling evidence.

There are knights of the poſt, and holy cheats enough, to ſwear the truth of the broadeſt contradictions, where pious frauds ſhall give them an extraordinary call. South's Sermons.

KNIGHT of the Shire. One of the repreſentatives of a county in parliament: he formerly was a military knight, but now any man having an eſtate in land of ſix hundred pounds a year is qualified.

To KNIGHT. v. a. [from the noun.] To create one a knight, which is done by the king, who gives the perſon kneeling a blow with a ſword, and bids him riſe up ſir.

Favours came thick upon him: the next St. George's day he was knighted. Wotton.

The lord protector knighted the king; and immediately the king ſtood up, took the ſword from the lord protector, and dubbed the lord mayor of London knight. Hayward.

The hero William, and the martyr Charles,
One knighted Blackmore, and one penſion'd Quarles. Pope.

KNI'GHTLY. adj. [from knight.] Befitting a knight; beſeeming a knight.

Let us take care of your wound, upon condition that a more knightly combat ſhall be performed between us. Sidney.

How dares your pride preſume againſt my laws?
As in a liſted field to fight your cauſe:
Unaſk'd the royal grant, no marſhal by,
As knightly rites require, nor judge to try. Dryden.

KNI'GHTHOOD. n. ſ. [from knight.] The character or dignity of a knight.

For that ſame knight's own ſword, this is of yore,
Which Merlin made by his almighty art,
For that his nourſling, when he knighthood ſwore,
Therewith to doen his foes eternal ſmart. Spenſer.

Speak truly on thy knighthood, and thine oath,
And ſo defend thee heaven and thy valour. Shakeſpeare.

Is this the ſir, who ſome waſte wife to win,
A knighthood bought, to go a wooing in. Ben. Johnſon.

If you needs muſt write, write Cæſar's praiſe,
You'll gain at leaſt a knighthood, or the bays. Pope.

KNI'GHTLESS. adj. [from knight.] Unbecoming a knight. Obſolete.

Ariſe, thou curſed miſcreant,
That haſt with knightleſs guile, and treacherous train,
Fair knighthood foully ſhamed. Spenſer.

To KNIT. v. n. preter. knit or knitted. [cnittan, Saxon.]

1. To make or unite by texture without a loom.
